Inquiry call over Forces deaths

Mr Michael Heseltine, the Secretary of State for Defence, has been urged to hold an inquiry into two weekend incidents in which eight British Servicemen died.

Mr Douglas Hoyle, who was Labour MP for Warrington until the dissolution of Parliament, said: "It is legitimate to ask whether sufficient money is available for military vehicle maintenance and whether eithe of these tragedies was caused because the vehicles were not properly serviced."

Police said the victims were parked in their car in woods near the airport. Pieces of burning debris set several other parked cars ablaze but caused no other casualties. Reuter reports.

Canadian military spokesman said the aircraft, flown by Captain Alan Stephenson, aged 27, was in a formation of five CF104 Starfighters taking part in the display at the US Rhine-Main air force base, the military section of Frankfurt airport.

He said that Captain Stephenson performed two complete circuits and had levelled off into a low-speed flypast near the spectators when the aircraft malfunctioned. Police said it exploded in the air.

The area was thronged with people celebrating a holiday weekend. Up to half a million spectators were watching the display.

The West German Air Force alone has lost more than 250 Starfighters in the last few years. Several other European air forces and Japan have also had serious problems with the aircraft.

Scientists think that a small brown butterfly in in danger of following the Large Blue into extinction soon. The Heath Fritillary, which should start to flutter through its surviving haunts in a few weeks, is now found only in Kent and Comwali.

Mr Alan Stubbs, a scientist-with the Nature Conservancy Council, said: "It is reduced to three sites, all of which have major conservation problems". Early this century the butterfly, which prefers quiet glades, was found in about fifty British woods.

The council, a quango which administers wildlife law, hopes to enable the butterfly to survive. In 1979 it declared the handsome Large Blue extinct, and it fears that others among Britain's 60 wild butterfly species could disappear by the end of the century.

Labour 'will not reduce defence cash until economy is growing'

By Rodney Cowton, Defence Correspondent

A reduction in the proportion of resources spent on defence under a Labour government would be dependent on securing growth in the economy, Mr John Silkin said yesterday.

As the Labour Party's spokesman on defence matters he was rejecting a claim by Mr Michael Heseltine, Secretary of State for Defence, that Labour's policy would destroy 400,000 jobs. Mr Silkin said the Labour mani-lesto made clear that the party would endanger neither defence nor employment.

He agreed that it might well be two years before growth in the economy began to reduce the proportion of resources taken by defence.

According to the Labour manifesto, it is the party's policy to reduce the proportion of the nation's resources devoted to defence so that the burden borne by the nation would be brought into line with that of the other main European Nato countries.

In a statement on Saturday, Mr Heseltine said that, taking

That the Prime Minister dealt somewhat abruptly with her Foreign Secretary, first at the press conference launching the manifesto on Wednesday and then at the opening regular news conference on Friday, is beyond question. On Wednesday Mr Pym implied, in answer to a question, that the future of the Falklands might be netotiated with Argentina if it renounced the use of force to settle the dispute. That is not British government policy, and it was not mreasonable for Mrs Thatcher to prevent a misapprehension developing -especially as it might have had international repercussions

Badly timed remark

On Friday Mrs Thatcher was asked to comment on Mr Pym's remark on a television discussion that he would prefer the Conservatives not to have a landslide majority. He was right that landslides do not, on the whole, produce successful governments. That is a jud-gment that would come well from a political scientist or a

But it was not wise from a senior party politician in the middle of an election campaign. Mrs Thatcher was bound to ciate herself from it. How could Conservative candidates be expected to fight in very marginal seats if they felt that their leader did not even want

So in slapping down Mr Pym in the way she did, Mrs correct. She will be seen as having displayed the very strength of leadership which the electorate admires her beyond all other qualities. She will not lose marks with the voters at the moment by appearing to be tough. Yet these episodes may come to assume a greater electoral significance if Mrs Thatcher hogs the limelight throughout the campaign. The risk for her is not that she may appear to be too strong, not that she may seem to be too much in command of her Cabinet, but that she may give the im-pression of being the only minister who counts at all.

She can afford from time to time to assert ber leadership publicly over her team, but not to allow it to seem that she has no team worth leading. If no other minister makes an impact during the campaign, the fraces with Mr Pym may come to be cited - inaccurately but per-haps effectively - as evidence of that failing.

But what about beyond the election? Has Mrs Thatcher behaved dismissively towards Mr Pym now because she intends to dismiss him theu? Mrs Thatcher has denied that he has given her an ultimatum that he would leave the Government if he did not remain Foreigu Secretary. He

Probable move

Mrs Thatcher probably does intend to move Mr Pym from the Foreign Office, just as she certainly intends to move Mr Whitelaw from the Home Office. But whe will want to keep both of them in the Cabinet - miles, of course, Mr Pym were simply to rule himself

The precise nature of the next Thatcher Cabinet, assuming that she wins, has not yet been settled. It will depend to some degree upon the extent of the victory – as Mr Pym must have had in mind when he was speaking on television — but it is most unlikely to be composed simply of congenial political spirits.

One only has to study the manifesto to realize that Mrs Thatcher is a more cantious politician than is often appreciated. She and Mr Pym do not like each other, but they will in all probability continue to work with each other.

THE ISSUES EQUALITY

Benefits for women in dispute

By Frances Gibb Legal Affairs Correspondent

Existing laws, together with the roles of the Equal Opporlunities Commission and the Commission for Racial Equali-ty, will be the focus of debate on equality between the sexes and for racial minorities.

Immigration is a key election issue. The Conservatives are standing on their record of immigration controls and the British Nationality Act of 1981, arguing that "effective immi-gration control" is the means to good community relations

They argue that since 1979 immigration has dropped to the lowest level since control of migrants from the Commonwealth began more than 20 years ago, and that the

The key issues on equality are: Immigration control and legislation such as the Nationality Act; programmes of positive action to combat racial and sexual discrimination; equal pay for equal work; public spending on child welfare and maternity benefits: role of the Equal Opportunities Commission and the Commission for Racial Equality.

Nationality Act creates "a secure system of rights and a sound basis for control in the Labour is pledged to repeal the Nationality Act and the Immigration Act of 1971, replacing them with a "citizenship law that does not discriminate against either women, or black and Asian Britons".

Under a new nationality Act Labour would grant automatic citizenship to anyone born in Britain and a new immigration Act would loosen the current age restrictions for children and the criteria for elderly parents and other relatives.

The Alliance sees the Commission for Racial Equality subsumed into a new, wider human rights commission and Labour envisages a special moniter for racial equality.

Debate on equal rights for women will centre on tax, equal pay and state benefit laws. The Conservatives are already pledged to amending the Equal Pay and Sex Discrimination Act to incorporate the notion of equal pay for work of equal value and recent important concessions on points pressed by the Equal Opportunities Commission. Both Labour and the Alliance also say that they would amend that Act. But they also want programmes of positive action as for ethnic groups, to ensure equal rights and opportunities for women at work. Labour wants a Cabinet minister to promote sexual equality and a strengthened Equal Oppor-tunities Commission, while the Alliance sees that body replaced by its new, powerful human rights commission.

All parties are pledged to remove the tax inequalities of married women and the most divisive issue therefore is likely to be the amount of public spending on state benefits such as maternity allowance.

Argentine protest

Buenos Aires (Reuter) -About 40.000 people marched through Buenos Aires in a mass protest over the military junta's statement that thousands of people who disappeared during anti-enerrilla operations should be considered dead.

The human rights march through the city centre to the Congress building on Friday night went off peacefully. It was one of the largest political demonstrations since the armed forces announced Argentina's return to democracy last year. Elections are due to take place on October 30.

Earlier the junta had raised a political storm by accusing the left wing of the Peronist Party of being a front for the Montoneros guerrilla movement.

More Volta politicians arrested

Ruling People's Salvation Council announced yesterday that a number of important political figures, including the Minister of Youth and Sports and a union leader, have been arrested for inciting student

The arrests on Saturday, made public in a radio broad-cast, came after what sources called a "preemptive coup" on Tuesday in which Mr Thomas Sankara, the Libyan-backed Prime Minister, was ousted.

Mr Sankara and several other leftist members of the Council were arrested on the orders of President Jean-Baptiste Ouedraogo, who accused them of "deviating the Council from its initial plans by demogogic and irresponsible comportment statements and actions."

In its communiqué, Council accused Mr Ibrahim Kone, the Sports Minister, and Mr Soumane Toure, the sec-retary-general of the Voltaique Union Confederation, of inciting high-school students to demonstrate on Friday in the capital to demand the release of Mr Sankara, an Army captain, and Jean-Baptiste Linguani, the head of the council's permanent secretariat.

The Government statement said those arrested had written petitions demanding the freeing of Mr Sankara and Mr Linguan in the name of "patriotic and democratic Voltans."

. The demonstrators damaged several vehicles in Ouagadougou as they marched through the streets shouting "Down with mperialism."

Saturday's arrests affected members or symmpathizers of the Patriotic League for Development, a Marxist organization with direct influence over the Voltaique Union Confeder-ation, one of four unions in this landlocked West African former French colony.

Ford Cortina. Britain's best selling car. 1981.

Ford Sierra. Britain's best selling car. 1983.

History repeats itself.

Remember the Ford Cortina? Indisputably the best selling car in Britain for the last decade.

Well now it looks as if we have a similar success on our hands.

Only seven months into its life the Sierra has taken over where the Cortina left off. Already it's established itself as the best selling car in Britain.

Not even the Cortina made it to number one in such a short time. No new car ever has.

Are you surprised?

You wouldn't be if you'd driven a Sierra.

It's one of those cars that feels right from the moment you take the wheel.

The dashboard curves around you so that all the instruments are easy to read and everything is easy to reach.

The way the car rides isn't just smooth. It's as supple as an athlete. That's all independent suspension at work.

The eager response to the accelerator, the crisp gear change, the positive steering, the nicely progressive brakes all add to the feeling that you're at one with the car.

The aerodynamic body slips so cleanly through the air that you cruise along the motorway with hardly a whisper of wind noise on just a whiff of throttle.

So it's no coincidence that the Sierra has just won a Design Council Award.

In fact, it has now won more awards around Europe than any previous Ford.

The Sierra is clearly a car you'll enjoy driving. So why don't you? Your local Ford dealer could easily arrange a demonstration.

And take your Ford Cortina in part exchange.

Man and machine in perfect harmony.

The clashes took place in Bad Hersfeld, in central Germany near the East German frontier, as demonstrators carrying ban-ners saying "Nazi out of our town – we've had enough of Fascists" and displaying huge photographs of skeletal inmates of concentration camps, marched through the town in protest at the two-day gathering of around 600 members of the "Comradeship Union of the First Panzer Corps of the

INTERVIEW: Alexander Solzhenitsyn

'Time to stand up for Britain'

By Bernard Levin

In your Templeton Address you said that the tragedy of the modern world is that man has forgotten God. When and how did this begin to happen? This is something that has been happening for a long long time. In the West it has already been happening for over three centuries. happening for over three centuries. In Russia it began fater but there too, it began before the revolution Our educated classes have been part of such a process for nearly two centuries, whereas the uneducated classes were affected for only about ten years before the revolution. And this was the greatest single factor that produced the revolution.

It really began perhaps in the wars of religion which began undermining religion and faith. The Renaissance is another period; it is an enormous process which really stretches over several centuries. And even at the beginning of the Age of Enlightenment it still hadn't clarified itself fully. But it was a process that accelerated, that went ever forward to that goal and which certainly became much more pro-nounced in the 20th century.

The centre of this is the belief that man alone is sufficient to himself? That began first of all as a reaction to the rigidity and austerity of the Middle Ages. But it is a process which once it had begun was inevitably going to go ever wider and ever deeper. My conviction is that the goal of Man's existence is not happiness but spiritual growth. But this conviction is regarded as something strange, something almost insane, though perhaps only 150 years ago it would have seemed a perfectly natural conviction.

Have not the mass of the people : right to enjoy the material possessions that previously were enjoyed by only a few?

want to distinguish between material sufficiency - that to which everybody has a right - and consumer greed. Material sufficiency is something that has existed in Europe for many centuries. Perhaps we have got a different scale for those of us who have been through the Gulag Archipelago. But what happened was a kind of veering round in human awareness in its attitude to material values. In our time, somebody who is very strict and limits himself can be surrounded by any form of material comfort or even luxury and yet remain totally indifferent to it because it is not the material which is the basis of our life. The horror is not that universal well-being has led to moral decline. But the moral decline has led to the fact that we now indulge too much in material well-being.

Is it possible in a democratic society to set a limit to people's indulgence in well-being?

Democratic society in the last two centuries has gone through a very, very striking and powerful development. What we used to call a democratic society a few centuries ago is not at all the same as that which we call a democratic society today. Two hundred years ago, when democratic society was being created in certain countries, there was a still clear conception of the Almighty, of God. And the very idea of equality was taken in fact from religion, from religious concepts; in other words, that all men are equal as the children of God. And nobody would have thought of trying to prove that a carrot was the same as an apple. People are fundamentally different their possibilities and their capabilities but they are equal as children of God. And thus, democracy comes into its own, has a full meaning up to the point at which men start to forget God. In the last two hundred years we have really turned away from God, and democracy has lost its higher centre Moral criteria were the forces that contained man, that were the inner brakes, as opposed to institutions.

In the last two hundred years we have really turned away from God

Is there something dark in the heart of man himself that cannot be eradicated whether it is an age of faith or not?
Yes, there is. And the path of mankind is a long path. And the historical centuries that we have lived through are only a small part of our total historical way. Yes, we have been through the temptations of the wars of religion, and we showed ourselves to be unworthy; now we stand before the temptation of the material, more than a sufficiency of the material, of luxmy, of everything, and again we show ourselves unworthy. Our historical process is really-consists of-man standing before the things which are temptations to him and of showing himself able to overcome them.

I take you think highly of the present Pope and his work? Yes, I think very highly of his personality, the spirit which he has brought into the Roman Catholic church and his constant and lively interest in all the various problems all round the world. In one of the Encyclicals of one of his predecessors it was said that the voice of the times is the voice of God. The present Pope does not agree with this axiom and fights it, for the voice of the times can be a false voice. We must not serve that voice but check

But in the Roman Catholic church some priests in oppressed nations - I am thinking particularly of some of the dictatorships of South America have felt it their duty to support and praise the activity of the Pope in our contemporary world, what I mean by that is that he is constantly guided by an awareness of the Divine. In other words, yes, he considers it proper to speak of this or that question, but he is always aware of the Divine. Whereas those priests of whom you have spoken who are active in South America and Central America have in fact fallen to one of the temptations that socialism spreads before us. Socialism, which in its very root is totally opposed to Christianity, loves to pretend that it has taken much from Christianity and given it some concrete form, concrete shape. The ironical thing is that even atheist literature in the Soviet Union uses this very same argument, saying look, look, our socialist programme is in effect a Christian programme.

But may not a priest resist oppression without himself being in any way a supporter of communism? Yes, yes, they can, but what I am saying is that they are caught within the net of this temptation, this trap. The trap consists in the fact that involvement in such work takes place on a totally worldly level. They are entirely absorbed by the social struggle which the Pope is not because he is always aware of the Divine dimension and the Divine dimension is in fact the governing e of them would argue that being involved in the social struggle is, in fact, carrying out Christ's teaching. No, they are wrong there. One must take part in social struggle in the name of the soul of every other person, and the soul of every organization. Whereas if we are involved simply in a struggle for material rights, that has nothing to do with Christianity.

Nine years in the West have made me into a pessimist that in the oppressed lands of the East spiritual regeneration is grow-ing; are oppression and suffering sary for people to turn to things of the spirit?

I would like to divide the question.

the question of suffering and the question of oppression. Yes, suffering is essential for our spiritual growth and perfection. But suffering is sent to the whole of humanity and to every living being it is sent in sufficient measure so that if man his growth. Now, if a person doesn't draw what has to be drawn from suffering but instead is embittered against it he is really making a very negative choice at that moment Now, if one speaks of oppression the horrifing oppression that we see for example in the USSR it really goes beyond the possibilities of heman endurance. It is an experience that really goes beyond common suffering Millions are simply crushed, physically and spiritually crushed annihilated but those who have passed through that oppression are then spiritually so strong, so mature, that they become really our hope in the communist years in the West have made me into a pessimist; looking from the East I used to ascribe to the West far more strength, far more determination and steadfastness whereas now would no longer guarantee that the West would withstand invasion by communism withstand being taken over, subverted, by communism. It s possible that the whole struggle of humanity against communism will not reguerate ourselves either.

I wouldn't like to put it quite as brutally as that I wouldn't like to make a forecast, 'yes this is the only way it can happen'. If only Western society could suddenly mobilize itself against communism then it needn't happen. As I said, such terrible oppression isn't essential - is not universally essential - but for this to happen the West must hear the voices of those writers, those publicists, those leaders, who say we are now already in mortal danger, we are in fact in greater danger than we were in 1940 when the German planes were flying over us". I am very sorely afraid that, in the Western context if a writer, a publicist, wrote that he would be mocked and laughed at. And if a political leader were to say this he would never be reelected.

There is a terrible paradox in our world: those who have no freedom long for it, but those who have freedom do not seem to care about it. I used to think that it was possible to transfer, to share, to convey the experience of one nation to another. at least by means of literature, but now I am beginning to think that no one can receive the experience of another without having acmally gone through it. One must have a heart full of compassion and a heart and a soul full of sense and sensibility in order to be able to take abon oneself, to receive, the sufferings of another.

Is it possible that there are people who cannot bear freedom in them-selves, and long to be slaves? Yes, today's Western Europe is full of such people.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn talks to Bernard Levin about the need for spiritual regeneration in both East and West

What causes such a condition? Lacking a consciousness of God, of the Divine, they lack an awareness of reality. The West is full, it's brimming over, with information, you would have thought everything and anything could be understood but in the eyes of our Russians who live under the Soviet regime the thing that amazes them, that we simply cannot understand, is why doesn't man in the West understand

Is it possible in the real world for a modern advanced society to live by spiritual and religious precepts? For a well-developed, economically well-developed society, that is the most difficult thing of all. But there is simply no other way.

technically and materially, the more difficult you say it is, then is not the goal constantly being pushed further and further away?

No, though the danger of losing that goal grows. Such is the destiny of mankind that the more we lose control of ourselves the more deadends into which we get ouselves. We are not quite in the dead-end but it is time we started thinking about it. We hear constantly rights, rights, it is always rights; but very little about

How do you explain the fact that for years and years some of the greatest scientists, and also artists and professors, were convinced, and some still are, by Soviet communism?

Those in whom the intellect has taken precedence over the spiritual, the heart, they are the ones who are gullible, who fall for the temptation of the clever wiles of Marxism. I am sure that Isaac Newton, for example if he were alive today would certainly not be deceived by Marxism!

I have always believed myself that it will not be the leaders of thought who save us but the ordinary man. Do you agree?

I would see the dilemma not in such simple terms. Those people who could turn around humanity or a society, we see them, so to speak, on a vertical line, and perhaps quantitatively we find more of them at the bottom simply because they are more numerous, but one certainly can't leave out of that scheme the people at the top of the ladder. The whole of history shows that any turn around, historical or social, in any important turn around the forerunners of it are always one or two or three people who perhaps are forerunners of that process by a century or more. We can't do without these forerunners, these leaders. But it is not the false leaders who have followed the lure and call of Marxism who are the genuine leaders. They will find themselves in a laughable and humiliating situation and many of them will repent but it will be too late and they shall weep.

If we assume that there is no war, how do you see the future of the West? I refuse even to consider such a perspective because I consider a war - not a nuclear war, but a war - as inevitable. In other words, I include in this all the explosions from within, all the so-called national liberation wars, and I think quite a lot of countries in Europe are very close to such explosions. And this kind of situation is frequently favoured by the very leaders of those countries. We have seen how Brandt weakened Western Germany how Palme really went out to help North Victnam, and what Papandreou is now doing to Greece, and there are many, many other examples. War doesn't necessarily come from the outside, it comes also from the inside and not even necessarily in the form of an actual insurrection; it comes in the form of the political blindness of the political leaders. And so it seems to me totally unreal to think in terms of a status quo in the world; there won't be a status quo - not for one year can we see a status quo.

Do you believe that socialism must in time inevitably degenerate into I am absolutely of the same opinion as our wonderful scientist Orlov, the Orlov who has been in a prisoncamp for many years now. He published an article shortly before his arrest an article in which he shows that any socialism, even the softest form, the most "democratic" form, socialism, if it is consequen-tial, logical, if it moves forward, if it doesn't stray to one side or another but if it follows its own inner logic, will inevitably come to communism.

And we see absolutely everywhere, in any country where this happens, the socialist will always give way to the communist. They will not stand want to talk now about nuclear disarmament. The campaign in this country is now very powerful for you think that implies? First of all, let's look at it at the universal level. I consider nuclear armament, chemical armament, bacteriological armament as utterly repulsive and horrific. I would never sit in judgment over anyone who condemns nuclear armament. But we have got another problem. The West carries the moral responsibility of a decision taken 40 years ago to manufacture and use nuclear armaments. Now the West without nuclear armament has nothing at all. Everything is put simply into nuclear armament. The fault lies at the inception, at the moment when the decision was taken to rely on nuclear armament, to stake everything on nuclear armament. That decision has kept the West safe for twenty, thirty years but now it is really like a boomerang - it comes right back at it.

Now the second aspect is, at the personal level, the extraordinary blindness of society and young people. For half a century you have had the chance to open the eyes of society and of the young, and Western young people simply have no idea of the real situation. Try asking them why isn't there such a movement for nuclear disarmament in the Soviet Union. Either they won't even understand the question or they won't care. What they say is we shall disarm unilaterally and then the communists will follow suit. Now here we see not so much disinformation as a complete blindness of understanding; there is also a weakening, a total erosion, of will Go to these young people and ask them. All right we agree to have unilateral disarmament but will you go into the army tomorrow in order to die - into an ordinary conventional army - and if they are truthful they will say on no. Today, resistance to nuclear armament really a very convenient pretext to disguise, to hide, if not their moral cowardice at least their moral weakness. In fact, they don't want any kind of armament, any kind of work, they just simply do not want to resist at all. Finally, the third level of all this, there is of course the active participation of Soviet money and Soviet participation and Soviet organization. The communists have enormous experience here. Already in 1917 Lenin gave five or ten roubles to every person for partici-pation in demonstrations against the provisional government. Stalin organized a so-called movement for peace in those days when he didn't have an atomic bomb and he, too, had money to spend on this. And, of course, this principle commues. But just to finish answering this question I want to underline one thing the problem isn't really reducable just to Soviet organization and partici-pation. If only the West had not relied for several decades on nuclear arms and if the young were steadfast of will and well-informed, no Soviet action would achieve anything.

Some nuclear disarmers in this country say that since they can do nothing about Soviet arms, the only way they can do it is by arguing against our arms, since it has to start omewhere.

It looks very good for them simply to protest against nuclear arms which are horrific, yes. And what they are, what they forget, what they disguise behind that, what is softnedalled, is their own unwillingness to defend their own country. The Soviet leaders in this situation don't even need to use nuclear arms. They will simply take conventional arms and will simply capture everyone with conventional arms and no resistance. And these young people who are so brave in their demonstrations and who join hands over a distance of miles, they will be told you cannot assemble in numbers more than three, even more than two. If they are told, right, no assembly in numbers of more than two or three, they will obey.

Some say that since a modear war would be a catastrophe for the whole planet, surrender, even for those who hate communism, would be preferable to a nuclear war.

axiom "Better to be red than dead" that there is no alternative in it because to become red is really in fact to die a slow death. The free people of the West have missed sixty-five years. They have stood there fully armed and not struggled When they give in to communism they will find themselves as slaves, and what is more moribund slaves. That's when they will begin to fight but in different conditions. And what is so amazing is that the West appears not to hear the absolutely explicit condemnation to death which has been pronounced. In 1919, the Comintern was created and its leaders, Lenin and Trotsky, who at that point had absolutely no nuclear arms, they hardly had any rifles or bullets to put into them, but none the less they declared a condemnation to death for the Western world; and the West laughed. Sixty years ago, the whole of educated Russia, the cream of Russian intellectual development, the whole intelligentsia, everybody, said "look, this is something quite unlike anything you have seen before": the West turned a totally deaf ear. Fifty years ago the logs of wood from the camps with things written in the blood of those who were imprisoned up in the north, those logs of wood somehow came to the West. Forty years ago millions of Soviet people again told of the horrors. They were not only not listened to but in their hundreds of thousands and millions were simply given back and betrayed to captivity and certain death in the Soviet ko in the famous trial hearing in Paris revealed the true nature of the Soviet regime and he wasn't listened

Although we were sentenced to death sixty-five years ago, we have still survived. Why should we not go on doing so?

too either. History does not forgive

Because there is no comparison between the situation when the Kremlin didn't even have enough rifles and today's situation where it has got the best rocket stations in Cuba, in Nicaragua, the best naval bases in Angola, Mozambique, South Yemen. We see that this process is not only a constant process but one that is accelerating with terrific speed.

Do you think that the emergence of Solidarity is a sign that there is real hope or is the fact that it was crushed a sign that there is no hope?

In this whole phenomenon, there is more hope than disillusion. It is a movement which gives us hope first of all by its scope and by its spiritual direction which rests not in socialism but in Christianity. Poland was able to manifest this thanks to the strength and force of its church but it is certainly a sign of what could happen in the other communist countries. But as regards Poland, the West really behaved as though it was seeing a stage performance, and there is some similarity with the Western attitude towards Afghanistan; for the West is constantly horning that there will be some kind of a miracle in the East, which will relieve the West of the need to defend itself. Maybe instead of Brezhnev, we will have the good liberal Andropov or some other dove; maybe the Polish Solidarity movement will change things absolutely in Poland, then in Lithuania then in the whole of the Soviet Union. But these events must not be looked upon as a spectacle; they must be looked upon as a call, an appeal to mobilize inner forces. For example in Poland the Western creditors need not have wiped out the Polish debt. There is this osychology in the West - we are helping the people - it dates back to the time of Roosevelt when whole factories were sent in kit form to be assembled in the Soviet Union.Since then the West has always been in fact strengthening the communist governments.

Now let's look at Afghanistan. The war has been on for three years. During all this time, the West, apart from a kind of generalized sympathy, has not done anything concrete for the country. If the West really understood that all the communist governments of the world are its mortal enemies and no kind of thaws, no kind of smiles, will ever change this situation, but that on the other hand all the subjugated peoples are its allies, the West could long ago, by its actions in Afghanis-tan have brought about a very different situation. You would by now have had two, three, four regiments of ex-Soviet soldiers ready and willing to fight this way. But the Western governments, including the Secondly, at the end of the Second World War the West undermined the faith and trust of all our people's in the East. We believed that the West was our ally whereas the West gave up those who had fought communism, gave them up to sure death and destruction. This story must not be forgotten.

Suppose that Jaruzelski could improve matters for the Poles to the extent that Kadar has done for the Hungarians; would you welcome this or would you argue that hings must get worse before they can get better? No, I wouldn't put it in that way. I would certainly welcome any improvement in the situation of the Poles but, first of all, I would not for the Hungarians. When Czecho-slovakia had to be invaded Kadar invaded it quite cheerfully. Every communist leader has certain limits. within which he can achieve very little. If, for example, Jaruzelski worked to prove himself a patriot and really did try to improve the conditions of the Poles, if he really were doing that then in no time at all he would be removed and somebody else would be put in his place.

The Soviet leaders can see that the system doesn't work, they can't feed their people, they have to maintain a gigantic system of oppression, they know they are hated by millions why do they go on with it?

They see that their system works very well indeed, because it has such copolitical successes to its credit that no conqueror in all history has ever had such gains to his credit. es, all right, the domestic economy is falling apart, but when crisis comes the capitalist world will always help them. But how the people live, what the people have, is really not their aim or their goal. It is a government which has no thought of how the people live. The people are dying, well let them die. But they will have other peoples to rule over.

A society like that, based on lies, surely cannot exist for ever: "A house builded upon sand." Do you agree with that, and if so, how do you envisage the disintegration begin-

Of course, it can't exist for ever and ever. Of course, future historians will say that communism existed from year X to year Y. But because, for two-thirds of a century, the West has been making mistake on mistake in its relations with communism. I have now come to the very pessimistic conclusion that communism still has quite a chance of spreading over the world. And viewed from the outside, one could use the image of a lunar eclipse, shadow has covered the USSR, covering others and eventually will leave the earth.

Is it possible to say when you might expect this to start happening? No, neither the form nor the time are open to human understanding or conception - we don't know. From the very moment when communism was installed, became a power in the Soviet Union, ever since that very start, that very moment, the most intelligent Russian people have always been saying "this is for five years, this is for ten years, this can't go on . . . this is so horrifically absurd that it can't go on." And the West then we really must save them looks like a fortress, like a rock, but because we must avoid any unwe have seen that this absurdity has pleasantness. But if it is an gone on and on, and the West is weakening and weakening. So, I will not say anything about the possible time or the possible form. But I am absolutely convinced that communism will go like the eclipse that I spoke of. Even our culture which has been under communism for sixty-five years, we have seen that with all its armaments and weapons, communism has not been able to crush Christianity out of our country. 1 personally am convinced that in my lifetime I will return to my country.

The leaders of the Hungarian revolution in 1956 and the Czech spring in 1968 all came from within the Communist party. Do you think it is possible that there are such men in the Soviet Union who are biding their time and working their way up through the hierarchy? First of all, I want to distinguish between your Hungarian example and your Czech example. The Czech model has no future, no perspective; this was an attempt by people who considered themselves totally and fully communist, to give communism a so-called human face, which is impossible, even if the Warsaw Pact hadn't invaded Czechoslovakia, or even if Dubocck and his group had utterly lost all influence. Now the Hungarian model is one full of hope and perspective. Because in the Hungarian model we saw the rebirth of national feeling instead of self-defence and self-affirmation. (I must say, in my own life, the Hungarian uprising of 1956 and the total inaction of the West were profoundly shocking experiences for me. I lost my faith in the West.) So the Hungarian model shows that even within the communist system, even through its leaders, there can come a sense of national self-preservation. In the same way as a sick body can suddenly come up with the antibodies to fight the sickness. But what should be said is that at that moment, the moment of the Hungarian uprising, the communist system had only been in force for about eight years. Hungary had not yet been broken by the communists. Among the communist cadres there were still people who had not been totally broken, whereas we in the Soviet Union have had that system for over 65 years. In other words, and gone; moreover, in the commu-nist hierarchy there is a constant process of selection. As soon as an appears, the system simply rejects him, and either he leaves it or he perishes. However, I have a firm conviction that our nation as an organism is not dead yet and, therefore, the young living shoots come out in the most unexpected places. It is instinct through which a nation saves itself. And through my work I.know, I can sense, there are many many people who think as I do. I do represent people in Russia. If I didn't represent anyone, the authorities wouldn't fear me.

In the 1930s, the West only woke up when war broke out. We have to wake up before war breaks out now. What will wake us up?

I wouldn't like you to be awakened by the ceiling falling on your heads. I would like the loud voices of outstanding people, writers, publicists, political leaders, to find the courage to say "look, the ceiling is cracking, it might fall". And they should not be afraid of being told "ch no this is to extend the same this is to be a standard to be a standard to be a standard to the same this is to be set to b oh no this is too extreme, this is too

The time has come to limit our demands to learnaboutself-sacrifice

What about externally? What would the communists have to do, what would the Soviet leaders have to do, for us to resist?

I don't know. So far, we haven't seen a single country for which the West would actually stand up and fight. Maybe the United States would go to war for Israel. I don't know whether Europe would fight for its oil. It is not the degree of danger that will stimulate you, it is the degree of inner awareness. What could be more striking, what could be more evident, than the way in which the Khmer Rouge destroyed, annihilated, its own people? Or for example, the Vietnamese boat people who drowned? Will you find any compassionate feeling for that?

Reagan what would you tell him? l must say that President Reagan

dations and advice. On the contrary, he keeps on getting public advice from leading American publicists and various newspapers of such a nature that even the asses' ears would collapse. I don't think Reagan's problem is a lack of understanding, but he has to struggle against the blindness and the shortsightedness of public opinion. when the shadow covers the earth He can't even manage to get across and then moves across. That to that public opinion that at the moment in Central America we see China, then gradually it will move the creation of an actual front away from those parts and start against the United States. When Reagan said that he was in a position of confrontation, extreme confrontation, with communism, he was jeered and hissed for having brought about the collapse of detente. Whereas, in fact, what he had done was probably to take only one small step in the direction of what he intended. American public opinion is such that - well I'll give you an example from navigation. Now when you hear an SOS signal you must ask: "Who are you, do you have a democracy?" All right, if they're a democracy, let's go and save them. If it's a communist SOS undemocratic Western regime, they can go to the bottom and sink! This is madness. There are those who actually stand in the front line under fire, and what is demanded of them is democracy. In Salvador the elections took place under machinegun fire and indeed, yes, the voters were mown down by machinegun fire. The American Congress and American public opinion shout "there isn't enough democracy -start talks with the bandits, let's have more and more elections under machinegun fire". And those are the sort of examples which really make me think of the West as a madhouse.

> What would you say if you had the opportunity to broadcast to the Russian people? What would you tell them?

> I am a publicist really involuntarily against my own will. If I could broadcast to my people I would read them my books, my novels, because in my interviews, my articles, I can't give even one hundredth of that which I have put into my novels.

Is there anything special that Britain, apart from the West in eneral, can do?

think British history has shown more than once that the British have remarkable faculty, a remarkable ability, to mobilize themselves in moments of danger. Maybe it is Britzin which could do one or two of the things I have talked about. But if there could be moral mobilization in Britain, now, before the ceiling falls down, then the standing up to be counted of Britain, even just Britain alone standing up to be counted against communism, would make an enormous impression on the communists. The communists in their greed to seize control of the world are, in fact, very clever in the way in which they discriminate and know perfectly well which are the weak bits which can be swallowed first. And where they find themselves confronted by steadfast will, they retreat. They even retreat in the face of their own prisoners, their very own prisoners who stand fast.

What final message in this interview would you like to give? I would just like to call the British to come to their senses before it is too late. The time has come to limit our demands, to learn about self-sacrifice and to learn how to sacrifice oneself for the salvation of one's country and for society.

Thank you very much.

Christopher Driver examines the evolution of Britain's postwar palate

Innate conservatism of taste and technical ignorance in the kitchen have inhibited the development of a domestic

British cuisine with an international appeal. Instead, Britain has proved surprisingly receptive to the colonization of its eating habits by a variety of exotic imported styles

Stirring up the global

The British Airports Authority, resourceful in adversity, is just now lacks an exact equivalent in English. trying, through its latest advertising campaign, to make something of images of familiar staples. For airports, read styles of cooking and eating. Few would accuse Britain of owning the best. But the British Tourist Authority, if it had the wit, could plausibly plaster the globe with claims that we had the most. Gastronomically, we are a nation of borrowers.

This phenomenon is not as new in the history of British cooking as many still assume. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, especially, the British developed and loved to display a marked taste for oriental spices and, later, exotic vegetables and fruit. Signs of dependence on imported culinary skills have long been apparent: Samuel Pepys and his wife dropped in one evening on his French periwig-maker's table d'hôte in Covent Garden and

'Them's black people's food." a colleague of mine heard a woman say as she dragged her excited child from a particularly colourful display of Indian vegetables in a Kilburn street market. Food is often at once the symptom and the cure of racial antagonism: the first assertion immigrants make of their own strangeness and privacy, but also the first gesture they can make, in nome or restaurant, towards pleasing perceptive (or greedy) members of the host community. It matters a great deal, within the culture of London, that the Chinese live by attracting the British to their food (even if translation falters, as in the "chicken blood porridge" I noted down from a smart Soho Čantonese restaurant menu a few months ago) while West Indians hardly know what to do with their diet outside their own fiercely protected domes-

For the history of British eating which was once, let us remind ourselves, the envy of civilized Europe the significance of the entire "ethnic" incursion into this country since the mid-1950s is that it has introduced to our cuisine a source of stylistic differentiation which is not stratified by social hierarchy. That is, we are at last breaking away from the French. Ever since the Norman Conquest. adopting French manners in the British Isles has been a sign of rising in and class connotation. Even vegetarianism has begun to act as a kind of taste tentacle, groping around the globe to foodways that lie outside European tradition. It neither knows nor cares what place brown lentils, coriander and aubergines occupy in the social pecking order. If it conveys a message, the message is political: animal liberation, Third

In an international city on the scale found the boeuf à la mode "uncommonly well-seasoned".

But ever since the Commonwealth and Empire came home to roost in the comparisons in restaurant settings conveyed by the food itself.

For this reason, restaurants are indispensable to any attempt to isolate types and groupings among immigrant cuisines. Recipes cannot convey it all at home, however versatile the cook and assiduous the book collector, and very few people, even professional anthropologists, can be familiar with the food cultures of more than a small proportion of the world's peoples as expressed by meals prepared and eaten within the family at both ordinary and festive occasions. An arena where numerous cuisines from different parts of the globe meet and compete in public, importing their own characteristic foodstuffs and making substi-tutions from what is available locally, and drawing customers from a com-mon pool of "floating eaters", is a new phenomenon of the twentieth century.

The more neutral the complexion of the host culture, the more discernible the colours introduced by an immigrant cuisine. For instance, French bourgeois cooks have put up strong resistance to both exotic and technological change, while the more complaisant British have been and are singularly receptive to external influences upon the foods (and even more the drinks) which they consume. This in spite of the conservatism the British profess with such conviction when alterations are suggested to one of their "birthright" dishes, and in spite of the technical ignorance that reduces almost all British kitchen processes at popular level to roasting, boiling and frying.

Reverse influences are equally possible or probable: an immigrant cuisine, uprooted from its natural habitat to a colder, wetter climate, encounters there the technological eating of a denatured late-industrial primitive: no cuisine gets as far as Victoria or Heathrow that has not already proved its ability to survive literacy, a money economy, and at last early-modern kitchen technology. (In a few instances, the technology may even be imported with the cuisine, in the shape of simple implements that are found superior to Europe's own for certain purposes: the work arrived with the Cantonese, the tandoor with the Bengalis.)

Almost any cuisine can follow the flag, as it were. Immigrants in a foreign city, whether dispossessed Austrian Jews in the 1930s or rich Japanese and Kuwaitis in the 1970s, need meeting places in London where they can talk to each other in their own languages and not have to mind the host country's manners. They hanker after dishes that their womenfolk may be too busy to bother with while they are scratching a living or raising a family under difficult circumstances. (Asian and Middle Eastern forms of purdah for women help to keep culinary cultures intact, but do not help to provide meeting places.) "Colonizing" cuisines of this kind are seldom conscious of an "audience" beyond their own community, though when an audience eventually arrives it is gladly accepted in most cases, not just for economic reasons but because its presence can be taken as a token of acceptance and respect. (However, among the foreign restaurants where the native Briton most often feels something of an intruder are the ones economically, because they are supported by oil sheikhs or Japanese

ings, and send urgent messages for reinforcements, until - as happened in Britain in 1968 - the host country itself anxiously pulls up the drawbridge.

Chinese cooking in Britain is the principal example of this process. Immigrants from Hongkong are numerically much less important than West Indians and Indo-Pakistanis, but a very high proportion work in the catering trades. Their strength - and their weakness - has been social cohesion and cultural assurance, and coupled with language difficulties in the first generation, this virtually ruled out real communication between immigrant and host. This factor is copiously while they were billeted in which have least to worry about even stronger with the Japanese, who Paris but took the taste home often express not just surprise but afterwards and looked round for something akin to alarm and dissomething akin to alarm and dis-pleasure when geijin invade their The British were not too proud to Restaurant critics have often noted the failure of black cultures (whether African or West Indian) to help themselves to economic self-sufficency and cultural assimilation in Britain by opening restaurants and food shops whose appeal to their own people would gradually extend to the public at large. This deficiency has sometimes been attributed to a general want of entrepreneurial, capital-forming skills, or merely to material poverty at an earlier period of their history. Poverty as such in a country or a people might be thought almost as likely stimulate culinary skills as it is to stifle them. unless it included a serious shortage of fuel - and fuel economy, as it happens, has long been forced on most Chinese and Indians. The curious air - at once self-conscious and desultory - that pervades the few African and Caribbean restaurants that exist or have existed in London should rather send inquirers looking for deeper causes in social organization and perhaps role division between the sexes.

The most sincere compliment one country can pay to another is to borrow its diet and imitate its cooking. The occasion may be a defeat or it may be a victory. The most famous example is Brillat-Savarin's commentary on the years after Waterloo, when the British comquerors not only ate

Military and ICS wives imposed the Victorian proprieties (French influence and all) on their husbands' Indian servants, who had previously had it all their own way. As 'Wyvern' (Col. Kenney-Herbert) put it in his Culinary Joitings for Madras (1878): 'Our dinners of today would indeed astonish our Anglo-Indian forefathers. Quality has superseded quantity, and the molten curries and quantity, and the molten curries and florid oriental compositions of the olden times - so fearfully and wonderfully made - have been gradually banished from our tables." The cooks on Indian hill stations returned the compliment by continuing to prepare brown Windsor soup long after the British had gone for ever, as though it were an elixir of successful imperialism. In one such "English Club" in Tamil Nadu this spring, I was given a very passable bread-and-butter pudding.

It has to be admitted, however, that British cruising as such is a weak

British cruisine as such is a weak power, globally speaking. British colonists in distant lands have often clung to their diet faithfully (the Falklanders. as sheep farmers, had little alternative) but they have seldom persuaded foreigners to adopt it, even in countries with suitable climates. Likewise, the export success of high prestige British foodstuffs - Stilton, marmalade, kippers, Christmas pudding – is disappointing both in variety and geographical spread, considering how easy it should have been to establish the taste for them through the imperial distri-bution network, and the political prestige Britain enjoyed on the continent of Europe:

From the standpoint of a community relations specialist, rapid assimilation of an immigrant culture - and by extension, its cuisine - to the (British) host culture is theoretically desirable. But only social scientists same into the second or third teurs to gather abroad a better living generation. Obviously, social rather than they could make at home. The than culinary factors are likely to be early colonists then repatriate a decisive in this respect, not is it a question of the vulnerability of the residual proportion of their earnpeople that keeps its cuisine intact from British flavour-blur and similarly insidious forms of social syncretism enjoys a better prognosis, communally speaking, than one that has let its historical identity go: it is a question of human dignity.

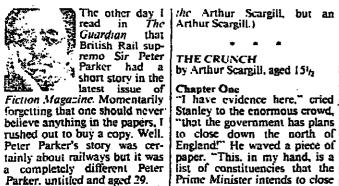

> Most immigrant cuisines have now been lodged in Britain long enough for the symptoms of resistance or surrender to be recognisable. Italians aimost always surrender, not for want of quality in the ingredients or of skill in their treatment, but for want of selfcriticism and out of an excessive desire to please. Americans, likewise, taste the customers, not the ingredients. Talented Frenchmen and Chinese know better, but often succumb to the commercial temptation presented by customers wno don't know better and who can safely be fobbed off with something that sounds right, however it tastes. In the kitchen, pride protects the Japanese, religion the Jews and the Hindus, competition the Cantonese and habit the Cypriots. The state of the artist

When Kitaj talks about coming pletely, ineradicably American over here on the GI Bill, it when you talk to him, it is hard immediately makes sense. He to think of him as an American painter. Kitaj's early work coincided with the beginnings of the Pop Art movement in Britain, and though he could not exactly be described as a fully paid-up member, he had ous connexions. In particular his habits of juxtaposing disparate images within one loosely organized composition was related to Pop Art practice, especially since some of the images were derived from newspaper photographs, printed material and other readymades beloved of Pop artists. Sometimes he went a stage further, by collaging the actual materials on to his carryases. The Ohio Gang (1964) is a good illustration of this style: a wide variety of images from many different sources is put together in an ambiguous space, seamingly at an ambiguous space, seemingly random yet held together by a complex set of internal tensions dispute it, for both economic and ecological reasons. The economic argument is that the massive increases in cereal and milk vields in recent years have been largely due to the excessive use of fertilizers. Farmers are effectively no better off, it is argued, because their extra income is offset by increased costs. Far better, then, to discourage fertilizer use in the Northern Hemisphere, perhaps through taxation, and send it instead to Third World countries where poor soil fertility is a real problem.

If that seems simplistic, the environmental arguments are decidedly complex. Ghost exposed

There is acute embarrassment among King Juan Carlos's speech writers after the Spanish monarch's official visit to Brazil last week. For cight paragraphs of his ringing address to the Brazilian parliament had been lifted almost verbatim from an article on Latin America by the Socialist Prime Minister, Felipe Gonzalez, in a left-wing Paris monthly, Le Monde Diplomatique. While the royal palace in Madrid sought to play down the gaffe and the Prime Minister expressed his regret, a search for the culprit led into the corridors of the Foreign Ministry. The article had apparently been forwarded to the royal speech writers in the form of a typed manuscript, and they are clearly not habitual readers of the Paris press. It looked to them like the raw material for a constitutional speech in line with government thinking.

Know thy enemy

My political free-thinker of the day is Oliver Smedley, who aims to beat himself at Saffron Walden. Others should note his commendable should note his commendable honesty when he says of this safest of Tory strongholds; "Of course I cannot win." Standing yet again for the Free Trade Anti-Common Market Party, his ambition is to top the 4.963 votes which he collected there as a Liberal, 33 years ago. His singular campaign poster shows this grey-haired gentleman, now in his tenth and final campaign, pitted against the old enemy, the 1950 Smedley. Even though his press release is stapled together at both edges, making it hard to turn the page, my money is on the older man, to whom Sir Keith Joseph has written: "You have been crying in the wilderness for a long time."

The Labour agent in Dover and Deal has turned the surname of his candidate, Stephen Love, to good effect. "Vote for peace, freedom, job: and Love", he tells voters through a inegaphone, and, even more arous-ingly: "It must be Love on June 9."

Back to base

A nostalgic return to Canning Town public hall the other day by a former Lord Chancellor, Lord Elwyn-Jones, for a Labour rally. It was there in 1945 that he was adopted as candidate for Plaistow, which Denis Healey, then in the same army unit in France, described as the safest seat in the UK. At such a time, a man from the front was the obvious favourite of the dockers, who made up a large section of the local party, and Elwyn-Jones was further helped by the fact that one of his opponents was a pacifist and another an agnostic. Scorning the advice of a learned judge, who warned that the autobiographies of all Lord Chancel-lors have harmed their reputations, Elwyn-Jones will tell the story of this and other events in his book In My Time, to be published in Septmber. For my money, his role in the Nuremberg trials will make the more interesting reading.

Lost for words

Order Order would seem the only possible title for an autobiography by Parliament's constitutional mentor. Alas, George Thomas was beaten to it two years ago by his own biographer, Ramon Hunston. However, he tells me he might yet persuade Collins to resurrect those much broadcast words when it publishes next year. "We're keeping our options open," says Thomas's editor. If he is ruled out of order, 1 still expect him to come up with something inventive (n.b. Bernard Levin has already bagged Speaking Up, given his familiarity with the procedure of naming.

Those who do not like to see old films of dubious quality on tele-vision will be dismayed to hear that John Gale is having to take Granada Television to court in an attempt to oblige them to continue accepting £5,000 a year not to show the film version of his stage show, No Sex Please, We're British. The arrangement hitherto has been that Granada, who bought the television rights in 1978, took the annual payment not to show the film (a flop as I recall), while the London stage run continued. Another couple of years and Gale would have paid the total which Granada laid out for the package in which No Sex Please was included, but like many people Granada are losing patience waiting for the stage show to fold. Next month it clocks up its five thousandth performance.

Unseen and unheard, a disaster is threatening the herds of animals which inhabit one of Africa's last great natural reserves. I have just been in Botswana and seen the dangers facing the wilde beest, hartebeest, elephant, buffalo and zebra roaming the Kalahari.

It is not merely a local problem. British policies in pre-independence days contributed to its making. Now the EEC is effectively ensuring these policies continue.

In its simplest terms, the problem is fences. The colonial administration decided to build veterinary cordon fences to control cattle movements and the spread of foot and mouth disease. It was a simple idea which totally ignored the fact that fences placed across the migration routes of wild animals can threaten their survival as surely as a machine-gun mounted in the back of a Land-Rover. The most notorious barrier built before independence - the Kuke fence, which has shut off wildlife from its wateringplaces in the Okavango Delta and along the Boteti River - has resulted in the death, directly or indirectly, of hundreds of thousands of animals. More than a quarter of a million wild animals die in the country as a whole each year because of the fences.

In the 1950s migration patterns were not well understood and the economic potential of wildlife as a complement to cattle not well appreciated. The astonishing thing is that more than a quarter of a century later the same blinkered attitudes can still be found among officials in Brussels.

Under a special agreement, almost 19,000 year into the Community, mainly into Britain. A council directive specifies that meat may come only from regions of the country free of foot and mouth. The EEC Commission has rigidly insisted on the veterinary cordon fences and on buffer zones to separate disease-free areas from those areas where foot and mouth has not been eliminated.

As a veterinary measure, the policy is questionable. Vaccination has made great strides since the 1950s and artificial barriers will not prevent airborne transmission of the foot and mouth virus. From the ecological point of view the policy is disastrous. Flying over Botswana today, one has the sense that the country is being parcelled up into squares, triangles and rectangles with only one thought in mind: to permit the extension of cattle into all tse-tse free areas, no matter how intrinsically unsuitable for cattle they may be and no matter what longer term prejudice may result.

Of course, cattle are crucial in Botswana, both culturally and economically. But the expansion of the herd from one million a few years ago to the present 3,500,000 must seen not as a natural and desirable evolution but in part at least as a response to the artifical stimulus of the high price levels set under the EEC-Botswana beef agreement - and this at a time when cheap beef from the EEC beef mountain is being dumped in other African countries, such as tonnes of Botswana beef is imported each Angola, to the detriment of their agricultural economies and of Botswana's own natural export markets.

What the EEC should be doing now is encouraging the use of Botswana's most extraordinary asset its wildlife. With other donors like the World Bank, it should promote comprehensive wildlife schemes designed to mitigate the impact of the fences; gazette more national parks and wildlife management areas, stengthen the national park and wildlife authorities, particularly in the battle against poaching and illegal hunting, and promote the sustainable use of wildlife through tourism and ranching.

One immediate step would be to ensure that in any future EEC-Botswana beef agreement a proportion of the beef "rebate" (at present running at £14.5m) is specifically earmarked for wildlife purposes.

Conversations with men like Louis Nchindo, chairman of the newly-formed Kalahari Conservation Society, have convinced me that schemes to promote the monitoring and use of wildlife can succeed given the political will to carry them through in the face of powerful opposition from the cattle lobby. What happens in Botswana, with its unique wildlife heritage, could be a test case with far-reaching implications for the future of wildlife everywhere.

Philip Jacobson tells how the economy has become El Salvador's front line

San Salvador The message comes across with Salvadoran air force - flying newly ominous frequency between the delivered US warplanes - inflicted propaganda and the revolutionary songs on Radio Venceremos, clan-destine mouthpiece of the Salvado-ran guerrilla forces. "See how easily we can smash the economy", boasts the leader of a sapper unit which blew up several key bridges earlier this month. Exultant newsflashes tell of the fire-bombing of a dozen buses in a single morning and the ambush of a tanker convoy trying to reach one of the many towns which have been without petrol for weeks on end. There are reports of sugar warehouses in ruins, coffee plantations in flames, crop spraying planes shot down. The Salvadoran government needs every soldier it can muster on the battlefield today, yet almost 60 per cent of its troops are tied down trying to protect important economic targets. The guerrillas ambush them expertly around these static positions and continue their largely unhindered campaign of economic destruction which has already cost this desperately poor little country about £400m since the war began four years ago. This is the second front of the war, attracting far less attention from foreign journalists than the fighting and the unceasing horror of the death squads. But guerrillas and government alike understand very well that long-term victory depends ultimately on the fate of the increasingly shaky economy. So does Mr Deane Hinton, the American ambassador to El Salvador. Economic aid from the US has always considerably outweighed the sums allocated for arming and training the government's troops. Even so, Hinton complains sharply, "until recently no one seemed to share my view of the magnitude of the effort needed to stop the economic decline". A telling example of what is going wrong is provided by a visit the ambassador made recently to the city of Berlin, a coffee growing centre in the eastern province of Usulutan. A large guerrilla force captured and held Berlin for several days last January, cleaning out the bank, looting shops and burning down government buildings. Coun-

even heavier damage. The purpose of Hinton's rare excursion into the deep countryside was to inaugurate a £650,000 reconstruction project, showpiece of a new "hearts and minds" strategy designed to bolster support for the Salvadoran authorities. As several guerrillas roam freely hundred around Usulutan these days, the ambassador was obliged to travel by military helicopter from which, doubtless, he could observe the twisted wreckage of ambushed vehicles dotted along the roads below. The hurried ceremony over which he then presided was attended, local people suggest, by several unarmed insurgents who had drifted into town out of curiousity.

The guerrillas we encountered lounging in the square in San Augustin, a few miles from Berlin, were anxious to explain the sym-bolic significance of all this. President Reagan's top man in El Salvador has to fly in for an important propaganda event and is hustled away again 20 minutes later. By contrast, they told us, we guerrillas move around here as we please. They knew all about the US aid project and would destroy it in due time (Berlin's affable mayor is inclined to agree: "The army says 'don't worry, we'll be there when you need us,' but it took them three days to pluck up enough courage to arrive last time").

San Augustin's inhabitants are not particularly happy about the guer-rillas' presence, fearing that the village may soon attract a government assault. It was highly incon-venient, they complained, that bus drivers no longer dared go there. though a few private lorries still do.

"The army just take what they want, destroy what's left and kill anyone who protests", one shop-keeper volunteered. He had heard rumours that guerrillas were extorting "war taxes" from a cooperative farm not far away. "What else can poor people do? They have to eat. and the government does nothing to keep the guerrillas away."

problem becomes clear. The alarmed Reagan administration is now banking on being able to launch its new and, if Congress approves the funds, enormously expensive plan for a double-edged offensive. An improved Salvadoran army will drive guerrillas from their major strongholds. allowing government teams to move in and revive the economy there with lavish aid programmes. In other words a lot more Berlin-type projects, so vulnerto be guarded more or less

As the guerrillas confidently acknowledge, this will provide them with plenty of tempting new targets. Radio Venceremos has already stepped up its threats against the economy. It has also taken to inviting Ronald Reagan to visit El Salvador and see for himself the fate of his latest attempt to seize the initiative on a war front where the US and its client government are at present losing hands down.

exposing war criminals in hiding and bringing out the full horrors of vazism. But sometimes the fascination with evil seemed to get the upper hand, and became almost an indulgence in it. So it was with the diaries – and this is one reason for the staff's anger that Stern began publishing such material, irrespective of its authenticity.

Accusations of a Nazi past have been made against Herr Henri Nannen aged 69, the founder and editor-in-chief of the magazine. He did indeed work as a radio announcer during the Hitler period and in propaganda during the war. But those who know him deny he was ever a Nazi in deed or spirit. The irony is that the diaries have all but undermined his life's work.

Herr Nannen started Stern in 1948 as a German Life. A soothing quality picture magazine, that was what the battered postwar generation wanted. But by the 1960s he found the static presentation too dull. Sensing the mood at the end of the decade - student revolts, rapprochement with East Germany, attacks on the Vietnam war - he decided to politicize the magazine, swinging sharply left and embracing the causes of the young and the committed

After 30 years of hectic, remarkable editorship, he handed over editorial control to Herr Peter Koch and Herr Felix Schmidt. They did not have his feel for the trend or intellectual control. Sensation, as a senior board member of the owners Gruner and Jahr, put it, became sensationalism.

Perhaps it was the search for the big scoop, something to place Stern ahead of its fellow Hamburg rival, Der Spiegel, that led the management, including Herr Nannen, to believe so quickly in the authenticity of the diaries when Gerd Heide-mann, the Nazi-obsessed reporter. offered to buy them,

But once the forgery was revealed, Herr Nannen and the management made the second mistake of using the departure of the editors to try to bring in a change of political direction. No one doubts that sooner or later Stern would have swung right, as profits have always come before politics, but in the chaos and self-abasement that followed the exposure of the forgeries, the staff would have none of it. They went to the barricades, reluctantly in view of the enormous salaries they earn, for the principle of the old, respected, crusading, liberal Stern - and in part they won. The mood now in the building is to put the whole affair behind them as quickly as possible. There is plenty of money still to repair the damage, and Herr Scholl-Latour is a highly respected editor. But still the smell of the bunker will linger on for monopoly money

A free press, we all agree, is essential to effective functioning of a democracy. It provides us with the facts essential to check what ОПL government is up to and so enable us to control it properly. Knowledge is power, we say, looking pityingly at the managed democracies where the people are allowed to know only what their rulers want them to know.

This comforting thesis, however, overlooks one important fact - that although anyone is free to start a newspaper, the costs are prohibitive and someone or some organization must be found to put up millions. And by definition people who can afford to do that are likely to be of one political point of view.

This may not matter too much in the ordinary way, when the mass of people buy a newspaper more for the sport, gossip and titbits than for its politics. And there are always, thank God, radio and TV to give a balance. But in the crucial moment of choice in a democracy - an election - it does matter a great deal that most of the newspapers going into voters' homes will have become propaganda sheets, more interested n selecting news than in reporting

Only the Conservative Party establishment, which believes in the monopoly of power (by itself), could remain indifferent to the fact that in this country 95 per cent of the newspapers are hostile to the Labour Party. This means that the facts on which political education should be based are filtered through the newspapers' prejudices, to reach the reader in a form which vindicates those prejudices.

Sometimes the hostility is quiescent. But when any important political moment arrives, it flares up savagely. Newspapers will not hesitate to throw vast resources of money and manpower into trailing and bringing down a chosen victim. The treatment of Peter Tatchell in Bermondsey is an example of which every decent journalsit should be ashamed.

The manipulation of news is the manipulation of power, and in this election the majority of "popular" newspapers are making full use of it. It can take various forms: playing up favourable news and burying the unfavourable; hiding policy under personalities: putting up misleading headlines.

The examples are too numerous to quote. One must suffice: the front page splash headline in last Monday's Daily Mail: "Thirty Five Thousand Jobs Lost if Foot Wins. Japanese would scrap plan to build Embarrassingly for the Mail, Nissan, the firm concerned, would have nothing to do with the story. We think that if the Labour Party got to power it would not substan-tially affect our proposals", the company said - a rather important contribution to the facts, one would have thought.

JUNE X 83 Barbara Castle

Next day the Mail carried on undeterred. "Car jobs row boils over" it proclaimed on its front page, ingeniously quoting the Industry Secretary, Patrick Jenkin, and two British car chiefs to keep a nonstory alive. Nissan's denial was tucked away at the end, almost indiscernible.

To his credit, Martin Linton in his column in The Guardian had some fun with this. Yet even The some fun with this. Yet even I ne Guardian, which, like The Times, is one of the few newspapers to report news fairly, is not guiltless of some strange headlining. "Labour's £11 billion jobs plan savaged" was the one which appeared over lan Aitken's straightforward account of Labour's manifesto in the paper. The story itself hardly warranted The story itself hardly warranted such derogatory emphasis, which only goes to show the political power of sub editors (2012) of sub-editors (two days later Mrs Thatcher's manifesto was treated with greater deference).

"Ah", I can hear Mr Jock Bruce-Gardyne (who also occupied this column) saying: "Here she goes, preparing the way for Labour's Bennite policy of bringing the press under state control." In fact, Labour has been discussing something very different how to make newspapers more independent, not less, by making them independent of monied proprietors through subsidized newsprint and other aids. But this is not the sort of freedom Mrs

Thatcher has in mind. The trouble is that our Conservative rulers are greedy: greedy for power and the money that fuels it. Not content with their near monopoly of the newspapers, they also want to ensure that Labour's opposition to their beliefs shall be started of finds. starved of funds. And so to its shame does the Alliance, which has not done too badly out of support from business interests, but which, like the Conservatives, wants to make it more difficult for Labour to get money from the trade unions, even though the Labour Party openly admits it is in politics to represent the people who are organized in trade unions.

In the next few weeks the hoardings and the newspapers will be flooded with posters and adverts on Mrs. Thatcher's freedom theme in what is rumoured to be the most expensive campaign in electoral history. It will largely be financed by contributions from companies - but Mrs Thatcher does not propose to put any curbs on that. For Mrs Thatcher is one of nature's autocrats. She will not be content until she has weakened every democratic check on her centralized dominance. And she is seeking five years more freedom to pursue those aims.

Surprise, Russia's secret weapon

The threat by "a senior Soviet official" last week that the Soviet Union will adopt a policy of "automatic" massive retaliation against all potential enemies if the new American medium-range missiles are deployed in Western Europe is of course a prime piece of intimidatory propaganda. Behind it, however, lies the unpleasant reality of Soviet nuclear war doctrine, which advocates the immediate use of Soviet nuclear weapons in the event of an armed conflict.

It would be unfair to say that this doctrine, as taught in the Soviet military academies (and thus for internal consumption, not propaganda) is a neglected study in the West. But it has scarcely been aired in public print, perhaps because it is too horrible to contemplate.

In the 1970s, mainly under the influence of Major General George Keegan, at that time Director of US Air Force Intelligence, translations of the most important Soviet textbooks were made. They have been carefully studied by Western specialists, including the Americans John D. Dziak of the Defence Intelligence Agency, and Joseph D. Douglass (an engineer turned strategist), and our own Air Vice-Mar-shal S. W. B. Menaul.

The best way to illustrate Soviet thinking on nuclear war is by direct quotation. One of the key textbooks, by Col. V. Savkin, is The Basic Principles of Operational Art and Tactics (Moscow 1972). He writes: "Skilful employment of nuclear weapons in combination with artillery, aviation and the fire of tanks permits delivery of a decisive defeat on the enemy on the axis of attack and creation of favourable conditions for friendly troops to advance swiftly into the depth of his defence and move into operational space. The offensive is the basic type of operation and its goal is the total destruction of the enemy." Now listen to the late Marshal A. A. Grechko, former Defence Minister, in his Guarding Peace and the Construction of Communism:

"The Strategic Rocket Forces which constitute the basic of the military might of our armed forces are designed to annihilate the means of the enemy's nuclear anack, large groupings of his armies and his military bases; to destroy his military industries; to disorganize the political and military admistration of the aggressor as well as his rear and transport."

Both the above quotations need to be read in conjunction with the subsequent deployment of the threeheaded SS-20s on Soviet soil targeted on Western Europe - to which the new American weapons would present a defensive counter. in an earlier work. Soviet Military Strategy (1967), Marshal of the Soviet Union N. Krylov spells out a

"first strike" strategy:
"The mass use of nuclear weapons in the first moments and hours of a war which has begun will undermine the economic might of the enemy, put out of commission centres of control of its armed forces and State, and lead to the destruction of the main groupings of troops, including strategic nuclear forces."

The texts quoted above, although some years old, are still valid Soviet doctrine. Perhaps the most eloquent of the American specialists arguing that US defence philosophy has failed to respond to existing knowledge of Soviet intentions is Joseph Douglass, mentioned earlier. On a recent trip to Washington, I had an exhaustive discussion with Surprise, as Dr Douglass says, dominates Soviet military thought. The first priority is to destroy enemy (that is Allied) missiles before they can be launched in response to attacks. The initiative has to stay with the Soviet side.

The Soviet emphasis on deception and disinformation is of crucial importance. Since the breakdown of Salt II, Pravda and the Soviet Radio have been saying that they have no thought whatever about a first strike, and that of course they agree with the Americans that it is impossible to win a nuclear war. That, however, is not the line they take behind closed doors, nor is it the doctrine they teach their own armed forces.

Simultaneously, the Russians deliberately play down their extensive civil defence preparations. Yet according to a Soviet civil engineer who defected to America in 1978, hardened shelters had already been built for 45 million people in urban

There are two alternative reactions to such realities. One is to throw up one's hands, and to say, with Bruce Kent and CND, that onesided nuclear disarmament is the only way out. The other is to grasp; that the Russians, as realists, will attack only if they are sure of winning; and restore the balance as soon as possible.

CONSCRIPTION

Conscription is the word which is conspicuously absent from the defence debate which rattles back and forth in the general election. Yet there could be no substantial improvement in Britain's strategic defence capability without a return to national service, or at the very least, a vastly improved system of reserves in army, navy and air force as well as in the defence industries. How and why is it that the three parties can conduct their arguments without daring to make any reference to conscription?

There is much talk about working within the alliance. Yet Britain is the only European member of Nato without conscription. France, indeed, has just extended the period of callup. Conscription is the one serious demonstration of a country's desire to enlist all its citizens in the defence of their society; and here it is ignored. It shows that none of the three parties is entirely serious about long term defence (and that goes for CND as well). There is no point in pretending to dislike the nuclear element in our armoury, and declaring an intention to do away with it, if you are not prepared to make adequate nonnuclear provision for the country's defence. Such provision must include the machinery to expand and to remain expanded during a possibly long emergency. That machinery can only amount to conscription or a universal system of reserve, which would probably have to be based on some kind of conscription anyway.

By these standards of security all three parties stand convicted of an inadequate defence policy, though for very different reasons. We have Mr. Heseltine at the weekend accusing the Labour Party of being prepared to cut 400,000 jobs in its programme on defence cuts. That may be so, since the Labour Party's concern to avoid redundancies has never extended to the defence world. But it is a less relevant point than the weaknesses in Labour's strategic posture.

Mr Healey retaliated by saying that the Conservative Government would increase the danger of nuclear war. Dr. Owen then accused the Labour Party of appeasement. The Conservative purpose. That is to create a "non Party is at least lucky to have the nuclear" defence policy, and to Falklands operation behind it. That crisis was caused by political error. The Falklands an equation which has been were rescued by a combination espoused by Soviet sympathizers of military prowess and a for at least a generation. demonstration of political will which had previously been lacking. That is an important not be limited. Why not? Who lesson for Britain's defence position within an alliance which hopes to deter war rather than to posture of deterrence. The Conservative Party's manifesto on defence is bland, to say the least. Perhaps that is as well if it enables the defence ministry quietly to recover from the tunnel vision desplayed by the last defence secretary, Sir John Nott. His review, based on a narrow method of accountancy, involved a programme of naval cuts which were convincingly vitiated, in particular as well as in general terms by the Falklands.

But if a Conservative Government is returned at the election, it will be able quietly to dispense. with the continentalism of the Nott defence policy. It should then work for a structure of the armed forces which, while enabling them to take part in the continental defence of Europe. more effectively prepares them to meet the more likely land, sea and air threats to British and allied security outside the NATO

There is no mention of Trident in the Conservative manifesto. Could that be a first sign that the progamme is under review from an equally costconscious Mr. Heseltine? That would be a mistake. Trident has several advantages over any system. One is that, as a seaborn deterrent it is out of sight and out of mind. That it should be, if it is to do its job.

Another advantage is that the decision, now that it is taken, need not be reviewed or renewed for the next thirty years. It is only when a new nuclear decision comes up on the agenda that the CND musters any support. The third is cost. The Labour manifesto refers to the "huge, persisting and distorting" burden it would impose on the defence budget, while forgetting that the Tornado aircraft ordered by Mr Healey many years ago has cost in real terms almost twice as much as will the Trident.

Conservative defence policy may be bland; Labour's is painfully and dangerously clear. The weasel words inserted by Messrs. Healey and Hattersley, who having served together as defence ministers should know better, merely impose superficial contradictions on the policy which cannot belie its underlying work to the dismantling of both NATO and the Warsaw Pact -

There is a determination to maintain that nuclear war canbut a madman would make certain that any war even a nuclear one, would be unlimifight it. National will is an ted? What the Labour party essential political pre-condition ignores is that all Soviet military able world.

of any convincing military doctrine presupposes that the next war would be a nuclear war from the start. Soviet generals write and lecture to their own people without making any bones about their intention to fight a nuclear war from the first shot, with no nonsense about waiting to see if NATO, when pushed, would resort to nuclear weapons first.

Mr Solzhenitsyn, whose interview we publish today, knows that only too well. The article on the facing page also reveals some further evidence. To disregard this, as do even the Liberal-SDP Alliance leaders, is to shelter behind an illusion.

The Liberals and Social Democrats want to "raise" the nuclear threshold by moving towards a "no first use" policy, strengthening conventional forces and establishing a nuclearweapon-free battlefield zone. Such an aspiration looks odd without any policy of conscription. It looks even odder in the light of all evidence that Soviet war aims, in practice rather than in propaganda, are to use nuclear weapons first. The Soviet nu-clear threshold, in other words, is at ground zero already, and likely to remain there. In these circumstances Western policies must surely be to deter the Soviet Union from all war by demonstrating, not just the will, but the capacity to prevent the Soviets winning any kind of war, nuclear or nonnuclear even if, in the light of Soviet documents the latter would be unlikely. In peace time the British have traditionally run down their ramparts. Now that deterrence is such an explicit doctrine to avoid war, such casualness is doubly irresponsible. For defence cannot just be the responsibility of government. It is the responsibility of the whole British people. They cannot will the end of deterrence - peace without willing the means vigilance and involvement. That is too important a business to be left to generals and politicians. It concerns us all.

For twenty-five years the abolition of conscription has enabled governments to pretend to the people that the defence of the country and her strategic interests can be comfortably and conveniently left to the professionals, while the rest of us pay our taxes and look the other way. That cannot be so; but nobody would guess as much after listening to the election debate. Without a sure sense of self-preservation, nourished as the root of all his instincts, an individual will bend to every whim. So it is with societies and nations. The will to survive has to be cherished and replenished in a dangerous and unpredict-

It is likely that black nationalist tactics against the South African state will roughen. Guerrillas are known to be infiltrating border areas and are building up cells and pressure in the larger townships such as Soweto. The classic guerrilla tactic is to prevent neutrality among a wary populace, compelling it - often through a subtle mixture of ruthless coercion and denunciation of obvious injustice - to take sides, but this has not yet been used. There may now be more bomb attacks in white urban centres, though that is no certainty.

If it is true that the ANC has made a major departure from previous strategy, many blacks may not welcome it, but the conflict could be effectively sharpened. Mr P. W. Botha can be expected to react only with the harshness for which the Afrikaner-led state is already well known. But unless he and his party show a readiness gradually to share power with blacks at the centre of South Africa, they may have to cope with an increase in terrorism.

Hedge against loss

From Mr Peter Adorian Sir, Your correspondent, Mr D. H. Harris (May 16) is entitled to his own views as to what would make our countryside "even bener". Personally speaking, as the owner of a not very large farm with several thousand yards of hedges to be cut each year, I, together with my employees, am glad to own a fiall hodge cutter, thankful for the drudgery it saves us and proud of the job we do with it. We even think our farm looks rather attractive.

My forthcoming trip to droot over the beautiful scenery of the Fenny Compton marina will be tendered "even better" if my rustic eyes are delighted by the sight of the local narrow boat Gongoozier's wife assiduously scrubbing her spouse's smock on the marina's strand before applying her well-muscled arms to her picturesque mangle. Indeed, even now I can picture in my mind's eye the interior of the happy couple's home. There sits the Gongoozier on his rush-bottomed chair, the turves glow red in his ingle-nook hearth as quill in gnarled hand, he pores over the next scroll destined to improve the minds of recalcitrant yokels.

In spite of the attractions of this romantic scene I don't need to look far to find one farmer's wife who thinks her life is even better since her hedge-ripping husband bought her an automatic washing machine.

Reading the election portents

From Professor Norman MacKenzie From Mr Gordon Smith Sir, Where have all the Don't Knows gone? Perhaps, in self-interest, the proliferating opinion polls should give us the full figures. If the undecided voters amount - as I have heard - to 20 per cent in some polls, the Alliance vote may turn out very different from present predictions.

In the long run, however, the Add that level of uncertainty to party will have to accept the basic the problem of three-cornered fights and new constituency boundaries, and the outcome is by no means a foregone conclusion.

From Mr Kenneth Parker

Sir, The first clause in the Conserva-tive Party's "last will and testament" advertisement (May 18) reads: "I hereby give up the right to choose which school my children go to and agree to abide by any decision made by the State on my behalf."

A year ago we enrolled one of our sons in a school in a neighbouring borough. The school has an excellent reputation and our son is happy there and doing well. Now, however, if proposals to reorganise secondary education in the borough are adopted, the school will cease to exist in its present form from September 1984, with one of the main changes being that the sixth form be abolished.

The borough is Barnet (Conserva-tive); the school, Finchley Manorhill (comprehensive); the parliamentary constituency, that of the Prime Minister. Yours sincerely

Political intimidation From Mr Michael Malone

Sir, In this country we are rightly proud of our long tradition of honest local government. Cases of personal or political corruption are rare. By political corruption, I mean the use of patronage by the political party controlling a local authority, either to reward its political friends by giving them commercial contracts or to punish its political opponents by excluding them from lists of tenderers.

It is with some concern, therefore, that one reads of a proposal that authorities Labour-controlled should adopt political criteria in order to decide which companies should be invited to tender for commercial contracts. I refer to the proposal that authorities which are

From the Reverend Dr David Russell Sir, Lord Bethell, writing on the global human rights situation (May 17), seems to admit that the incidence of state sponsored murder, torture and unjustified imprison-ment is often as bad, if not worse, in right wing than in left wing police states. Yet Lord Bethell adduces credible reasons why we in Britain should be more concerned with abuses of power in the USSR than in say, El Salvador, South Korea or South Africa. There are those, including many Christians, who with equal credibility are almost exclusively concerned with op-pression in countries like South Africa or Chile.

Surely both are types of special pleading - however good the reasons may be. We can all justify selective indignation to ourselves. That does not make it right. In the torture chamber it makes no difference to the victim what kind of uniform his

Sir, Rabbi Goldberg's serious reservations (May 19) about media coverage of the wars in Lebanon would be more convincing if he did not disguise his own ethnocentricism behind cries of antisemitism and latent prejudices. Perhaps the

It is regrettable that he cannot find anything good to say about the way in which you exercise your critical freedom - other than a couple of off-hand comments. No shortage of singing talent

From Sir Thomas Armstrong Sir, I read in your issue of May 18 that Sir Colin Davis is concerned about present-day standards of singing. Training is amiss, and the talent, he believes, is not there.

I also read, in Michael De La

Noy's new book about Eigar, the composer's complaint to his friend Schuster. "There is not a single voice coming on in the solo world, and young people have given up choral work, and the distressingly thin physique of the modern boys and girls, who do try to sing makes their voices so frail and metallic that the general tone is miserable." This at a time when Isobel Baillie, Eva Turner, Astra Desmond and Kathleen Ferrier were just emerging.
And what did Rossini not say about the state of singing in the 1860s? And Handel, before that? Perhaps, after all, there has never been any good singing?

competitions. However, we agree with him that the long term development of singers has, as he says "gone out of the window" and we are daily made aware of the reasons why.

A singer's training has barely begun when, at the end of three or four years, the mandatory grant dries up. Post-diploma training is

From Father Patrick Lynch Sir, I wish to respond to Captain Christopher Ward's letter (May 14) regarding the role of Roman Catholic chaplains. At one level the role of the chaplain is certainly to care for his flock. However, at another level a chaplain has the responsibility to help people understand the social teaching of the Catholic Church and to assist people in any moral choices that they may have to make,

For many years nurses and doctors have had to make very serious moral choices about participating in an abortion. Should Roman Catholics participate in an abortion? No. The teaching of our Church is clear and a chaplain acts as a reference point or a guide in coming to decisions about such a

Likewise, a chaplain to the Armed Forces will have a similar role. There is a consensus among Christian churches that the first use of nuclear weapons is wrong. Should Roman Catholics then allow themselves to be put in a position of participating in the first use of nuclear weapons? Or, if they are in that position, should they obey such

I would suggest that one role of the chaplain is to teach and to guide. When a person decides that they in conscience cannot participate in such a practice the chaplain will have to defend such conscientious objections. This is not primarily a political role for priests but rather a moral one.

What we need is nurturing of the promising singer, not for a few weeks at a time, but long term, and this can only happen if there is more full time work coupled with care of

This country is recognised as second to none in its training of singers, yet we are allowing the fruits of this training to rot away or disappear into the opera houses of Germany and France. OBITUARY

LORD CLARK

Eloquent art historian who drew audience of millions

Lord Clark, OM, CH, KCB, long known as Kenneth Clark, died on May 21 in a nursing home in Kent. He was 79. A former Director of the National Gallery, the first Chairman of the Independent Television Authority, author, television performer and lecturer, he had become in recent years, not least as a result of the television series Civilization, the art historian most widely known to the general public in this country and overseas.

Kenneth Mackenzie Clark, only son of Kenneth McKenzie Clark and Margaret McArthur, was born in London on July 13, 1903. He was educated at Winchester and Trinity College, Oxford, but the most formative period of his education was probably his subsequent twoyear sojourn with Berenson in Florence – a goal he is recorded as already setting himself at school. In his first published work, The Gothic Revival (1928), he spoke of his debt to Berenson as "difficult to de-scribe and impossible to repay". In good, and some perhaps less satisfactory, ways, these years left their mark on him. Born with many of the advantages for which Berenson had striven hard - among them considerable wealth - he was able from the first to cultivate leisure, his own keen taste in collecting works of art and that independence which he always highly valued. At Winchester he had won several drawing prizes and claimed as a boyhood hobby the rearranging of the paintings collected by his father. sportsman-industrialist whose preference was for the work of such artists as Millais and Orchardson. Clark's first official role was as one of the organizers of the major exhibition of Italian Art at the Royal Academy in 1930; and whatever later interests and enthusiasms he developed, his profoundest response was probably always to Italian Renaissance art. In 1931 he was appointed Keeper of Fine Art at the Ashmolean Museum. Three years later, at the exceptionally carly age of 31, he became Director of the National Gallery in succession to Sir Augustus Daniel. He held that post until 1945, being appointed mean-while in 1934 to be also Surveyor of the King's Pictures. In 1935 he published his catalogue of the Leonardo da Vinci drawings at Windsor, probably his most sustained piece of applied scholarship. It was followed by a monograph on Leonardo (first published 1939, often reprinted) which may reasonably be claimed as the most satisfactory of his books and one of the finest general biographies of an artist to have been written in England in recent years. The quality of its writing, and its combination revealed a distinguished mind. consolidating an achievement which had no doubt tended previously to excite at least as much envy as admiration. Although Clark occupied a prominent place on the English artistic scene in those years, encouraging by patronage con-temporary British art in ad-dition to his other interests, his tenure at the National Gallery was inevitably clouded by the approach and then actual outbreak of war. Under him a policy of cleaning some pictures nad been initiated; certain important pictures were also acquired. Yet it remains a somewhat disapointing record. Nor was Clark always at his best in problems of personnel and actively concerned with the War and values on a Mediterranean century European art.

Artists' Scheme, and at the Gallery cooperated with Dame Myra Hess in the popular National Gallery wartime concerts, as well as later devising the Picture of the Month" scheme, whereby one masterpiece at a time returned to Trafalgar Square.

At the end of the war, and after the safe return of the whole collection, he resigned as Director. He took no new administrative post until 1953. Arts Council.

Thenceforward he held no much in demand on advisory and trustee boards - among them those of the National Gallery of Scotland, the British Museum and the Victoria and foreigner of serving on the Conseil Artistique des Musees

Nationaux in France. It was in the years following 1945 that Clark's fame grew widespread. He established an unrivalled position as an elegant, accomplished writer and lecturer on a range of artistic and cultural subjects; as such he was sought throughout the world. Several of his books and articles originated in lectures, and his gifted technique as a lecturer helped him to become a persuasive, popular television performer. A new and much more widely responsive public for the arts existed in the postwar years, a public partly made aware through Clark's own gifts for communicating his knowledge intelligibly and attractively.

He twice occupied the Chair of Slade Professor of Fine Art at Oxford: over the period 1946-50, and again in 1961-2. Some of those who heard him lecture on, for example, Bellini, in a hall packed with attentive undergraduates, none of whom had any training in art history. were stirred to an extent which had perhaps not occurred at professorship.

From one course of Slade lectures came Clark's Landscape into Art (1949), well received especially by literary critics. Its success was eclipsed only by The Nude (1955), from Mellon lectures given in Washington, probably the most sheerly popular and most often quoted of his books. In 1966 appeared Rembrandt and the Italian Renaissance, based on most sensitive writing went to the Pidon Piero della Francesca (1951), while his steady interest in Ruskin was manifested by lectures, prefaces to editions of Ruskin's work and the Arts Council exhibition "Ruskin Today" in 1964.

With the evacuation of the collection to Wales, he was free looked on himself as inheriting to assume a new post, first as Ruskin's role as skilled, sym-Director of the Film Division pathetic interpreter in words of and then as controller. standard, very much in the tradition not only of Ruskin but of Pater and Berenson. Northern Europe found little place in his concept of the Renaissance. And though he could assimilate a figure like Cezanne, he showed scant sympathy for, or deep comprehension of, most manifestations of eighteenth-

It cannot be claimed that he was one of the greatest scholars of documentary art history, or that he offered profound and revolutionary theories about the nature of art itself. Yet in stimulating appreciation of the visual arts, sometimes through apt allusion to other arts, and by subtle, isolated observations, he exerted great and useful influence. Partly educated in the dangerous tradition of the English amateur, he was yet careful to keep abreast of research and try to remain erudite as well as eloquent. His tremendously successful

In addition, he Civilization had been conceived had the notable distinction for a and as such found appreciative reception in several countries, including notably the United States.

Somewhat ironically it was among his own profession that Clark met with least acclaim for a variety of reasons. There was something enigmatic about his personality, attractive in its very mixture of hauteur and diffidence, urbane, and yet rarely seeming relaxed. A certain symbolic rightness was apparent in the initial "K" by which he was commonly known to his friends and would-be intimates. He probably never found contact with other people quite easy, despite being much honoured, praised and accepted even in circles conventionally indifferent to the arts. To younger colleagues, with whom he may often have felt more empathy than among scholarly contemporaries, he could be surprisingly generous and kindly; and praise from such a cool, detached-seeming figure was bound to have an encouraging effect.

In his later years he wrote two volumes of autobiography, of which the first, Another Part of the Wood (1974), was warmly tion of a lonely Edwardian childhood. Its sequel, The Other Half (1977), traced with some irony and self-depreciation, though not without pride, the period of his greatest fame. A moving passage (echoing letters he had written at the time) dealt with the death of his first wife, Jane, to whom he had devoted so much care during the wearisome years of her protracted illness. The two volumes the first Wrightsman lecture in together provided an ac-New York. Some of Clark's complished, characteristically subtle portrait of his life and career, confirming his endemically ambiguous attitude to society and social success - and, in the last analysis, to himself.

Clark received a host of honours, degrees and international awards. He was made KCB in 1938, a Companion of Honour in 1959 and a life peer in 1969. In 1976 he was awarded the Order of Merit. He married in 1927 Elizabeth

He points to a row of benches in front of the Festival Hall. They face the water, but it is invisible if you actually sit in them.

"It's not clear here where you should go or what you should do. Good architecture does not need signs - you don't need signs at St Paul's." We reach the Hayward Gallery and Queen Elizabeth . Apart from vocalising by the dancers. the elements are familiar from her current works, but more concentrated and so more exciting.

Just as Dean evolved her own kind of choreography (a style which others have pushed further, to more exciting results), so many young British dancers are trying out different modes. A group of them performed on Friday at the halffinished Chisenhale Dance Space in Hackney, converted from part of a former brewery and awaiting a fire escape before it can change from club to public status.

The most striking work was a solo by Gaby Agis, which actually was meant as a duet but had to be adapted because of her partner's illness. She also chose to perform it not in the studio but on the flat roof, where she danced in a huge shallow pool of water. The capacity of the dance to survive such drastic changes and still look good is evidence of her imagination. Dressed in old-

Mexico 'may be on the mend'

Mexico, which owes banks around the world $90,000m, may have seen the worst of its economic difficulties and managed to stabilize inflation, President Miguel de la Madrid contends.

The prospect of Mexico recovering from its worst crisis in half a century will be welcomed by bankers, among others, who are concerned about Brazil's difficulties in meeting the terms of its debt repayments agreement. Brazil owes about the same amount as Mexico.

But stable though it may be now, inflation in Mexico has soared from 30 per cent a year ago to 100 per cent and has generated a wave of pay demands. President de la Madrid has asked trade unions to reduce their demand for a 50

ORDER ENDED: The US Justice Department has tentatively agreed to end a 33-year-old court order barring the Timken Co. which makes roller bearings, of dividing markets with its wholly owned British and French subsidiaries. The court order overturns a 1950 civil antitrust ruling which charged that Timken had conspired with its British and French offshoots to divide up the world market for anti-friction bearings.

The group hopes to use the proceeds from the placing to finance further expansion in the United States where it already has projects in Atlanta, Georgia, and Beverly Hills, California. Group exports accounted for 20 per cent of last year's £3.1m sales. However, the group's profit performance has been erratic, dropping from £164,000 to £97,000 in 1981 and then climbing to £200,000 last year. The bulk of Godwin Warren's profits come from its investment in car park equipment which has developed over the last 30 years. Its latest breakthrough has been a microprocessor-controlled parking unit which has been good enough to attract the attention of the Americans.

STATEMENT OF THE CHAIRMAN, Mr. T. S. HOHLER, M.C.

to be presented at the Annual General Meeting of the Company on 13th June 1983

A steady fall in interest rates in the six-month period to 31st October 1982 enabled your Board to report record profits at the interim stage. Expectations of further falls were partially fulfilled on 4th November when base rates eased again by 1/2% to 9%. At this point a number of factors, most notably a sharp weakening of world oil prices, led to a sudden and largely unexpected relapse in the level of Sterling. The immediate response, on 26th November, was to push interest rates up by 1% and, when this proved insufficient to steady the Pound, by a further 1% on 12th January 1983. Although action had been taken to reduce and shorten our portfolio, some losses were sustained. A measure of confidence has since returned allowing rates to revert to their earlier downward trend. However, market rates have tended to discount falls long before the Bank of England has deemed it prudent to sanction them and, as a consequence, capital profits have been partially eroded by running losses. Nevertheless, the profit for the full year of £1,500,000 after provision for rebate, tax and transfer to Inner Reserve is the highest in your Company's history

Your Directors propose that a final dividend of 5 pence per share, making a total of 7.5 pence per share, be paid on the Ordinary capital, an increase of 15.4% over 1982. A transfer of £500,000 has been made to General Reserve which now stands at £3,500,000, and Inner Reserves stand at a record level.

The outlook for the current year is as clouded by uncertainty as ever At the time of writing, there appear to be grounds for modest optimism but doubts persist on money supply trends both at home and in the United States, the strength of the economic recovery oil price stability and many other factors. If the result of the General Election on 9th June is any other than the return of a Tory Government with a working majority, the implications for Sterling and interest rates are grim.

By midnight on Friday, with the Usited States and Canadian delegations still dazed by the ridicule to which they had been exposed by FIFA's charade of hearing the representations which they had long before decided to ignore, several members of the executive committee with a conscience were admitting that there had not been a vote.

on Friday morning Mr Have-lange, having had lengthy individual discussions with most members of the executive at a social function the the executive at 2 social function the previous evening, asked the assembled committee of 29 if they had any objection to the report of the special commission, which some of them had only just received.

They might have been colleagues capturing a private moment in a day by the seaside, not a public outing that was to be witnessed by an estimated audience of 400 million in 50 countries.

Inevitably there were those who chose to kick sand in other people's faces. Case, by far the most experienced member in Brighton's side, threw out early provocative challenges to Robson, Wilkins and Davies. Whiteside, too, refused to shy away from showing his strength and it was his robust tackle that put an early end to Ramsey's

The smiles: happily evident among the contestants themselves, broadened even further at the end when the two teams joined each other to receive deserved and generous applause during their lap of honour. The referee, lenient rather than officious, assisted in keeping the atmosphere buoyant. It was within his power, for instance, to have booked or even sent off Whiteside.

Twice United's young forward, finding himself lacking a frustrating couple of inches in height, used his hands deliberately to control the ball and "score". On both occasions Alf Grev employed commonsense and merely commiserated with rather than. ished Whiteside by patting him on the head.

In conditions as beavy as wet sand. the match ebbed and flowed with all the regularity of the tide. United's Red their own caste was suddenly knocked over by an unexpected blue wave. Moran, whose notable lack of pace led to a suspicion that he was not fully fit, failed to reach Howlett's deep cross and Smith rose behind him to nod home. The flock of Seagulls, reticent and fidgety at the start, could now settle and wait to see if any more welcome crumbs might be offered

That one should fall, from a corner with only three minutes of normal time remaining, to Stevens was entirely apt. In the absence of the suspended Foster. the England Under-21 defender proved such a solid and polished rock that some feel he should immediately be promoted to the senior international side. Ironically, after serving his apprenticeship at Ipswich Town, he was released by Bobby Robson, now the national manager.

One of United's absentees, Coppell. was more sorely missed on the right flank. Ron Atkinson, their manager. claimed that Davies was "one of our best players", but after a promising opening in which he almost headed them into the lead he was largely ignored. Nick Faldo won his third tournament in successive weeks at Sand Moor, Leeds, yesterday. With a final round of 69, blemished a little by shots dropped at the 16th and the 18th, he finished on 272, eight under par, in the Car Care Plan event to beat Brian Waites (67 yesterday) and Howard Clark (70) by one stroke. Southgate. Dynamo Alma Ata.

Southgate's hopes of winning the European club championship disappeared here yesterday when they were beaten in their last group match by the holders, Dynamo Alma Ata, of the Soviet Union. All Southgate can expect now is the bronze medal when they play off today against Real Club de Polo, of Barcelona, Dynamo will meet the Dutch champions, Klein Zwitserland, in the final.

but it was not near enough. Dynamo seized a snap chance in the fifth minute of the second half and Sothgate were in deep water.

With their tightly controlled defence, in which Duthie was outstanding, Southgate gave little away up to the interval. Neither did the Soviet champions, generally with nine men at the back. But when the change to strick arose Dynamo. the chance to attack arose, Dynamo made considerable headway with their speed, fitness and control.

If Southgate had sought an early goal as diligently as they did the equalizer, matters might have been different, but in attempting to contain their rivals they did no more than play into their hands. Westcott, who had come on as a substitute, began the second half ominously by shooting wide in front minously by shooting wide in front ommously by shooting wide in rout of goal. Retribution came almost immediately when Nechipurenko raced through on the left and crossed the ball for Apelganets, urking in the centre, to score a welltaken goal.

With Ryzkhov suspended for dangerous play, Dynamo were reduced to 10 men, but Southgate had by then become too desperate to take advantage. Five minutes before the end they came close to a score from a short corner, the Dynamo and then from Thomas.

Leverkusen, of West Germany, reached the women's final after the esult of their match against Skif Moscow was altered in their favour by the technical delegate from 2-2 to 2-1. After consultation with the umpire concerned, the second goal which the Moscow team scored from a penalty stroke was nullified on a point of law, the German team having protested.

McGuigan US debut put back

By George Ace

Barry McGuigan's intended New York debut next month at Madison Square Garden has been put back until July. His manager B. J. Eastwood said after his sixth round stoppage of Samuel Meck from the Cameroons in Navan yesterday that McGuigan would not be fit to box in New York on the Duran-Moore world light-middleweight cham-pionship bill because of an eye injury sustained in the fourth round following a clash of heads. McGuigan sustained a cut about one-inch long under the left cyctrow and although it did not inconvenience him for the remainder of the bout Eastwood has decided against him taking part in the June

Meck proved a durable opponent but McGuigan's onslaught was too much for him. McGuigan's jabbing with the left hand and his ability to with the left hand and its acting to book off the jab posed problems for Meck from early in the bout and before the first three minutes were over blood was flowing freely from Meck's note. Meck's nose.

The only dangerous moment for McGuigan came in the fourth round when Meck opened a gash on the McGuigan's left eyebrow following the collision of heads. But the injury proved nothing serious and during the break. McGuigan's seconds stemmed the blood and he carried on in the fifth round as he had been doing throughout the contest - left jabbing and hooking

For most of yesterday morning it had looked promising enough: high cloud, occasional showers and some count, occasional showers and some sunshine. No joy for Somerset

The storms rage on unabated. No play was possible in four of yesterday's John Player Special League fixtures. There was, though, joy for the cricket statisticians: Somerset had two limited-over games abandoned on one afternoon, which is a new record of sorts. Soon after their match at The Oval was called off, Somerset's Benson and Hedges Cup game against Minor Counties at Slough put back to today, was abandoned owing to the ground being waterlogged. Neither side could have qualified for the quarter-finals. In addition, Somerset lost their John Player outright lead to Hampshire.

When I mentioned this yesterday to Alma Ingle, one of the joint promoters of tonight's European title bout at the City Hall, Sheffield, she countered with: "That's the idea of the game, not getting hit." Indeed. Since Graham is on the point of boxing for the world title in the not-too distant fiture, it is most unlikely that he will change his winning formula against Celemente Tsinza, of Luxembourg.

Holmes did just enough to hold on to the title he won five years ago after a surprisingly tough challenge from 25-year-old Witherspoon, who began the bout a 6-I underdog. One judge had 33-year-old Holmes ahead by seven points and a second judge by two points. But a third scored the contest 115-114 in Witherspoon's favour.

The closeness of the bout has prompted Holmes to consider retirement: "I'm going to take a good look at the overall picture," he said after his forty-third professional win. The going apart, there was no semblance of an excuse for any of the losers in Saturday's Goff's Irish 1,000 Guineas at The Currigh, som in fighting, fashion by Mrs Eddie Thieriot's L'Annayante. This turned out to be on of the cleanest run classics for years, and curry out to be on of the clemest run classics for years, and every challenger of note appeared to get a clear run at the important stage.

After the outsider Joann's Joy had out out the running for the first five fucious, she was tackled and passed by Beat the Drum, who clung on to the lead for almost a furious, but could not accelerate as Alain Badel brought L'Attravante with a

Stylish Smuggly adds to Douieb's riches

Smuggly won the most important victory of her career with a fine display in yesterday's Prix Saint-Alary at Longchamp. Olivier Douieb's progressive filly came with a sustained late run to cut down Sharaya three hundred yards from the post and she won going away by two lengths.

Surgeon is under no duty of full disclosure

Hills v Potter and Another Before Mr Justice Hirst [Judgment delivered May 18]

A surgeon advising a patient on the risks of undergoing a major operation was under a duty to inform the patient according to the practice adopted by a substantial body of medical practitioners of medical practitioners competent in the particular field but not under an absolute duty of full disclosure

Mr Justice Hirst so held in the Queen's Bench Division in giving judgment for the first defendant. Mr John H Potter, a consultant neurosurgeon and his employer, the second defendant. Oxfordshire Area Health Authority, in an action brought by the plaintiff. Mrs Sylvia Doreen Hills, for battery in an operation performed upon her by the first defectiont.

the plaintiff had undergone an operation in 1974 to relieve a condition known as torticollis which had left her paralysed from was characterized by involuntary contractions in and sideways torsion of the neck. Drugs treatment and physiotherapy provided only temporary relief.

The plaintiff saw several specialists and in 1972 inquired about the possibility of an operation. In September 1973 she was referred to Mr. Potter, the first defendant, and the English action. Mr Jusice Sheen he attended two consultations with

She was told that the muscles on she was told that the muscles on the right side of her neck would have to be cut, but not that the operation would be performed close to the spinal cord.

Mr Potter said that it was the only operation he knew of which might afford her some relief, and that he would advise his wife to undergo the operation if she were in a similar position. He said that a surgical collar might be necessary for some time after the operation.

He did not mention that there might be anaesthetic complications or that there was any risk of death or paralysis, or that anything might go scriously wrong. She was told that it decision should not be rushed.

After the consultations the large stress and the consultations the consultations the large stress are consultations to the consultations the large stress are consultations to the consultations the consultation

After the consultations the plaintiff white a letter to Mr Pouter asking him if she would be able to hold her head straight after the operation, and do her own housework. He replied in a letter that those things could be expected if the operation were successful, but that a satisfactory outcome could not be guaranteed, although there was a very reasonable prospect of a successful result.

She decided to have the

She decided to have the operation, which was performed in January 1974, the plaintiff then being aged 48. There were no complications during the operation tiself but in the recovery room she collapsed and went into a come for collapsed and went into a coma for apparent that she was severely

She now asserted that her consent to the operation was not operative as it was not fully informed.

The English courts had taken the view that in diagnosis and treatment a surgeon had to exercise such care as accorded with the standards of reasonably competent medical men at the time: see Bolam v Friern Hospital Management Committee ([1957] I WLR 582): that case dealt also with the standard in giving advice, and had been implicitly accepted by the House of Lords in Maynard v West Midlands Area Health Authority (The Times May 9

There was no clear distinction between the standard of care in giving advice and that in diagnosis and treatment. The standard was and the authent line standard was not that of absolute and frank disclosure as a fiduciary as in Nocton v Lord Ashburton ([1914] AC 932). Mr Potter had therefore completely fulfilled his duty in sixing the advise he did giving the advice he did.

Canadian and United States authorities which had been cited to the court indicated that the courts there in some instances required a higher standard of disclosure, but those decisions had caused much concern in those countries.

That principle could only be incorporated into the English law by an appellate court or by Parliament. The framing of the action in battery was to be deplored. The appropriate cause of action in cases such as this was negligence.

The action failed and judgment would be given for the defendants. Solicitors: Frimonds for R. P. Huggins & Co. Reading, Hempsons.

Housing group lease is a 'long tenancy'

Eton College v Bard and

A lease granted by a housing association for 94 years or until the lease ceased (otherwise than by death or bankruptcy) to be vested in a member of the housing association (whichever was the earlier) was held by the Court of Appeal on May 17 to be a "long tenancy" within the meaning of section 3 (1) of the Leashold Reform Act 1967, where effectively the only circumstances in which the term could come to an which the term could come to an end prematurely were explusion of the lessee from the housing association and, possibly, purported assignment to a non member.

LORD JUSTICE SLADE, with. whom Lord Justice Oliver con-curred, said that the correct meaning of the words qualifying the phrase "term of years certain executing 21 years" in section 3 (1) was to autribute to the word "terminable" a both transitive and intransitive sense and to the word "otherwise" account midintransitive sense and to the work

Merchants occupied woodland for tax

Russell (Inspector of Taxes) Hird Russell (Inspector of Taxes) Hird and Another

Before Mr Justice Warner [Judgment delivered May 20]

Profits accruing to timber merchants from dealing with the timber from some 37 acres of woodland did not have to be taxed as their trading profits under Case I of Schedule D. It was open to general commissioners to hold that those timber merchants were in the material time so as to entitle them to be taxed under Schedule B-tax charged in respect of the occupation of commercial woodlands.

Mr Justice Warner so held in the Chancery Division in dismissing an appeal by the Crown from the determination of the Leath General Commissioners who discharged estimated assessments made on the taxpayers. Mr John Hird and Mr Fred Mercer, under Case I of Schedule D in respect of their respitations that insper profits from the timber. Section 91 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970 provides that tax be charged under Schedule B "in respect of the occupation of woodlands in the United Kingdom managed on a commercial basis".

Section 92 provides for the amount assessable to be equal to one-third of the woodland's annual Section 92(3) provides that "every person having the use of lands shall be deemed to be the occupier therof". In 1976 the taxpavers purchase the timber in the woodland from the owner under conditions that they should go on to the land to fell and take away the timber and clear the land for replanting.

carried out that work they constructed roads through the woodland, provided machinery, employed fellers, maintained the fences, gate and diches, made good any damage done and cleared the land for the next planting. The commissioners concluded that they were the "occupiers" of the land during the relevant periods and should therefore be assessed to tax under Schedule B.

Mr Robert Carnwath for the Crown: Mr R. K. Mathew for the taxpayers.

MR JUSTICE WARNER delivering a reserved judgment said that the Crown's main submission was that a person could not be said to have "the use" of woodlands for the purpose of section 92(3) unless he had the exclusive, or at all events

the had the exclusive, or at an events the paramount, use of them.
The taxpayers, it was said, had no more than the right to take a particular crop and that the acts of user found by the commissioners were no more than ordinary incidents of the exercise of that right having regard to the nature of the crop. Neither the existence of the right nor the acts of user excluded the use of the land by its owner.
But the authorities showed not only that the question who was the occupier of land at any particular time was one of fact but that it was a question that could not be answered by looking only at the legal rights of the persons concerned. One had to look at what was done by each of them.

Clearly the owner of the land was Clearly the owner of the land was entitled to exercise all the rights of a landowner, provided that in doing so he did not interfere with the exercise by the taxpayers of those rights that he had, by contract, granted to them. Obviously he could will be a contract, the land will be a contract, the land will be a contract, the land will be a contract. walk over, or shoot over, the land with his family and guests and dogs – provided always that in doing so they did not obstruct the taxpayers. An alternative argument by the An atternative angument by the Crown that the case be remitted to the commissioners to find further facts was also rejected. Defence perhaps prejudiced by late amendment Regina v Thomas (John Joseph)

In his Lordship's judgment such a construction could not have been the intention of Parliament as it would make the provisions wholly unfair: where the commission did believe that a person might have acted unlawfully, that person would be entitled to the safegnards provided by section 49(4), but where the person was believed to be innocent of any such acts, he would not be so entitled. Before Lord Justice Lawton, Mr Justice Croom-Johnson and Mr Justice Stocker not be so entitled.

Section 49(4) was not very happily worded, but in view of the dicta in the Court of Appeal in R v Commission for Racial Equality, Ex pare Hillingdon London Borough Council ([1982] AC 779, 783-6; [1982] QB 286, 296), his Lordship was bound to hold that the commission had no power to embark upon an investigation into the activities of a named person unless it believed that he might have committed acts made unlawful by the 1976 Act.

IJudgment delivered May 17]

The amendment of an indictment at the close of the prosecution case under section 5 of the Indictments Act 1915 was made so late in the course of the trial that it might have hampered the defence and might have caused injustice to the defendant.

Accordingly, the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) allowed an appeal by John Joseph Thomas and quashed his conviction before Judge Wickham and a jury at Liverpool Crown Court on November 11, 1982, on a count of receiving stolen property which had been added to an indictment containing a count of thefit at the close of the prosecution an indicament containing a count of theft at the close of the prosecution then at the close of the case.

Mr Anthony Carus, assigned by the Registrar of Criminal Appeals, for the defendant, Mr Alexander Kennedy for the prosecutor.

MR JUSTICE CROOM-JOHN-SON, giving the indement of the MR JUSTICE CROOM-JOHNSON, giving the judgment of the court, said that the indictment should originally have contained alternative counts of their and handling, since the facts disclosed recent possession of stolen property.
The end of the prosecution case was probably as late a moment in a trial that so radical an amendment could conceivably have been made.
Having regard to the very lateness. Having regard to the very lateness of the amendment, it was not prosecution case could not have been hampered in some way by the fact that the indictment did not include the second count. In the circumstances the court could not be satisfied that the amendment caused no injustice to made and the conviction would be Solicitors: Mr B. H. Crebbin.

college of swansea -

It is at about this time of year that sixth formers often begin to think about taking "a year off" before going on to higher education. Reasons are varied but usually include the desire for a break from academic work after A levels, the chance to see something of the world, and a wish to earn money before going to college.

Arguments rage for and against the idea. There is a good deal to be said for getting off the academic conveyor belt, but much depends on the reason for it

Before becoming a full-time student it can be helpful to taste something of working life, since many employers are now looking closely at previous work experience as well as at qualifications. Parents, however, often worry that in a year off, the desire to continue with higher education can disappear, and in some cases this undoubtedly happens. Sixth formers are often concerned that their proposed college or university will not approve of a year away from study.

All surveys conducted among students who did take a year off and then proceeded to higher education that some admitted to initial difficulties in settling down, but none performed less well academically than originally expected. In universities, polytechnics and colleges therefore, the idea of spending a year away from the system is usually regarded as at least acceptable if not positively beneficial, but there are exceptions. Most mathematics departments are against it, while many admissions tutors for other courses agree in principle, but insist that the time should be spent "constructively". As definitions of this vary somewhat, the only thing to do is contact the

Many people would like to spend some time abroad, and provided that money is not the overriding factor, temporary jobs overseas can be easier to come by than those at home. On the whole, foreign students are usually willing to settle for lower paid work in return for the chance to travel and possibly learn a language, and are therefore not in direct competition with nationals in the search for a job. However, most countries are suffering from unemployment, just as we are, and the number of unskilled jobs available has declined. A summer holiday job in a hotel or similar establishment can be a good way to start. Most hotels recruit extra seasonal staff and a more permanent iob may then materialize. Several British travel companies employ young people who can speak a foreign opportunities for students between courses language as couriers in their continental camp-sites, and for non-linguists there may be domestic work available. Some of these firms are particularly interested in "year off" students. Au pair work is often easy to find, and other ideas include grape picking, agricultural work, teaching English and office and shop work. Work on an Israeli kibbutz is another possibility.

For anyone who is interested in voluntary work (expenses and pocket money only) many organizations arrange long or short term periods of work mainly in Europe, but worldwide in some cases Two useful publications which are normally vailable in libraries are Summer Jobs Abroad which gives addresses in most contries for details of both paid and voluntary work and also valuable advice on health and work permit requirements, and A Year Off. which contains information on voluntary work, but also gives some ideas on finding paid employment In the current employment situation well paid, unskilled temporary work in this country is becoming harder to find. Traditionally, students have worked in shops, offices, factories, hospitals, hotels and catering establishments. Although the employment situation is tightening up, these areas are definitely still worth trying. Shops and offices often need extra staff to cover the summer and Christmas holiday periods. Building sites may be in need of temporary labourers and the easiest way to find out is to approach the foreman of a construction site. British hotels and holiday camps can be a good source of seasonal employment, and throughout the year bars and restaurants often have difficulty in finding staff for evening and weekend work. Hospitals may still have openings for people prepared to work unsocial hours, and if you are willing to stay for a year it is worth inquiring about a post as a nursing auxiliary. Jobs involving children are still fairly easy to come by and there are specialist agencies which can arrange positions as nannies, mother's helps or as teachers or matrons in preparatory schools. If you have a specialist skill or hobby this can often be put to good use. Secretarial agencies may have temporary positions on offer, several companies which run adventure holidays for children recruit staff to act as sports instructors, anyone with science A levels could work as a laboratory assistant.

On the whole you will have to put in a lot of hard work in order to find a job. Do not expect to see many advertised. Register with employment agencies, look through local papers, use any contacts you have and write direct to personnel officers. It is worth mentioning that some schools are members of organizations such as: G.A.P. which arranges a year's work for sixth formers between school and higher education, while in some areas large companies like LB.M. offer a year's planned placement to young people who have a higher education place provisionally arranged. Your school will be able to tell you more.

Lastly, if money is not an absolute priority and you would like the opportunity to do something worthwhile, there are several organizations which arrange periods of community service lasting from six months to one year. One of the best known is Community Service Volunteers.

3 give up prison rooftop protest

An attempt to talk seven prisoners, including four IRA men, out of their roofton protest at Albany jail on the Isle of Wight began yesterday after three of the 10 men who started the demonstration on Friday came down.

They were taken off the roof by a hydraulic lifting platform and a spokesman at Albany said: "The rest of the prison is very quiet".

A total of 110 men have now been transferred from Albany to mainland prisons following the destruction of the jail on Friday when prisoners rioted, ripping up furniture and hurling celldoors and sinks at prison officers. Damage was estimated

The whole of B Wing is now unusable and a quarter of C Wing has had to be evacuated There are 168 men left in the

The men on the roof have hung out banners with messages scrawled on white sheets asking for the repatriation of "IRA political prisoners" and equal treatment for inmates of prisons in Ulster and Britain.

Film of the damaged workshops and art room was shown on television news bullctins. A prison spokesman said that taxpayers should see what they would have to pay for.

candidate for Home Secretary. Sir Geoffrey's reputation for toughness and single-mindedness was won during the Heath Administration, for his part as Solicitor General in the passage of the European Communities Act and the Industrial Relations Act, the two most controversial measures of the Parliament. That reputation has been strengthened by his apparently unyielding stance during the Thatcher years.

But as a young politician he was also known for his repu-tation as a social reformer.

His only serious rival would be Mr Nigel Lawson, another former Treasury minister. But Mr Jenkin has the longer ministerial career and Mrs Thatcher is thought unlikely to want to move Mr Lawson from the Department of Energy, where he has established a firm

Mr Whitelaw's departure from the Home Office in the event of a Tory win seems to be in little doubt. He is expected to made Leader of the Lords soon after the election.

Letter from Warsaw

How Britain helped the Polish underground

official Poland. Hardly a day passes without one spokesman or another denounting the stupidity of Western sanctions or the mendacity of the Western press.

During these inclemen times, diplomats, by way of defence; tend-to revive their glittering national contri-butions to Poland: the French talk of Enlightenment, of Voltaire's influence on Polish thought, of the Francophone courts of Polish kings. The Italians chatter about the church. But the British remain strangely silent - our main gift to Poland is the Warsaw sewer

That may seem a dubious achievement, especially during summer, when the stench rises out of the cobble-stoned roads leading to the Vistula river. But in the nineteenth century the British construction was: formidable triumph of persuasion and engineering and these sewers later saved more lives than the average first and centre, acting as a clandestine hink between Warsaw districts during the Second World War.

The system was designed by William Lindley in the 1870s and the construction work was continued by his sons. William and Joseph. The municipal authorities decided after the great fire of Warsaw in 1866 that: a water supply system was needed – until then districts such as Praga pumped their water straight from the river without filters and wells were the main water SOUTCE.

But the social resistance to a sewer system was strong, partly because of the cost. A partly because of the cost. A typical parhiphlet of the period is entitled: The water supply and sewage system for Wasaw as an instrument of Judaism and charlalarystaimed at the destruction of the Polish agriculture and at the extermination of the Slavie mination of the S population of the Vistula

But Lindley, in an effort which would nowadays cam him half a page of promotion in the Financial Times, succeeded in selling his design and even managed to per-suade the Warsaw mayor, then as now a general, to use his influence in Czarist St Petersburg-to get approval for the project.

The West is in had odour in quality of the design than the way it was used by the anti-Nazi restistance in occupied Warsaw During the Warsaw uprising of 1944, it was the sowers which proved to be the only reliable link between the old town district and the northern district of Zoliborz, which were cut off by the German troops.

The sewers became not only a communications channel but also the way to transport ammunition, guns and food. Conditions underground were even worse than above: the tunnels were black and round. 'so that it was almost impossible to find a footing.

The routes which eventually encompassed most of the centre of the capital were tried ont, by "sewer women", kanalarki nimble girls who laid string as markers along the way. To lose the string was certain death. The escaping guerrillas had to use short sticks to feel their way and even a relatively short dis-tance could take a whole day of inch-by-inch progress.

The sewers had been used to some effect to provide escape for Jewish resistance fighters during the ghetto uprising of 1943, but came fully into their own the following year.

The Germans swiftly realized what was going on and developed their own "sewer units" which would boobytrap the tunnels. Langing. according to at least one account, grenades from the roofs of the tunnels. A gas known as Typhoon was also used and its explosive power was so dramatic that there are few survivors' accounts of its effects.

Nowadays the sewers are merely a source of complaint.
The water supply too is limited my own is out off for a time, usually three weeks, every summer — partly because the old Lindley system cannot cope with the large city that: Warsaw has become and partly because of the large amount of equipment that was destroyed during the war.

But the Lindley network is still coping remarkably well and has certainly stood the test of time better than Voltaire. There is a pervetse satisfaction in being able to smell, every day on the way to work British influence.

Nature notes

Blackbirds and song-thrushes are still singing vigorously; a male blackbird will sometimes sing with nis beak full of insects on his way to feed his young. Woodpigeons are displaying in the air; they soar up, clap their wings at the crest of the arc, then plane down again. Green woodpeckers are aesting: they bore a new hole in a tree each year, a foot a new since in a tree each year, a root or more deep, and lay their translucent eggs on woodchips at the bottom. Fox-cubs are out of their earths, and playing above the ground: the vixen will stay with earths, and playing above the ground: the vixen will stay with them till autumn.

Grey poplar leaves are opening: they are a brilliant glossy-green above, downy white beneath. On the black Italian poplars, the young leaves glitter-like copper in the sun. Horse chestnuts are already like hills of darkening foliage and white blossom. In limestone country, the spurred purple flowers of the wild columbine are appearing. Caterpillars of the gold-tail moth are common on hawthorn hedges. They are red, black and white, with poisonous spines; the moth they will turn into is pure white, with a golden tuft at the sterm.
